ALFRED HAYES, BOSTON LAWYER, KILLS HIMSELF WITH A PISTOL

Body of Well-Known Attorney Is Found in Pasture Back of His Home at Hopkinton With a Revolver Clutched in Hand

THE body of former Representative Alfred S. Hayes, a prominent Boston attorney, with law offices in the Tremont Building, was found in a pasture back of his home in Hopkinton yesterday afternoon with a bullet wound in the right temple and a revolver clutched in the right hand.

Medical Examiner Palmer of Framingham said that the case was undoubtedly one of suicide, also that Mr. Hayes probably shot himself the day or evening before, and that the body had been in the pasture all Friday night.

No specific cause is given for Mr. Hayes' self-destruction. Mrs. Hayes, after recovering her strength from the first shock of the sad news, declared she knows no reason for her husband's suicide.

As the story of the suicide was repeated around Hopkinton and Framingham last night a report grew that financial worries had driven Mr. Hayes to take his own life, but the details of these reported money troubles were not learned.

Discovered by Hunters.

The suicide was discovered late yesterday afternoon when two Hopkinton hunters, taking a short cut across Mr. Hayes' land, came on his body in the pasture. They telephoned the police, who notified Medical Examiner Palmer.

After viewing the body and giving his preliminary opinion that the case was one of suicide, Dr. Palmer permitted the body to be removed to the house, where the family had already received the news.

Mrs. Palmer said:

"Mr. Hayes left home for Boston Thursday morning as usual, but did not come home that night. He was in his usual good spirits when he left home, and I was not worried when he did not return, because he has frequently been detained in town in his law business.

"I know of no reason at all for his doing this. There has been no family trouble or any other that I know of."

Mr. Hayes has been esteemed as a man of well-settled affairs and of good income. If he has had financial worries they have not been known generally.

Native of Boston.

He was born in Boston in 1862 and was graduated from the Boston Latin School, '87; Harvard College, '91, and Harvard Law School, '94. He began law practice in Boston and was accounted as enjoying a comfortable income.

He formerly lived at No. 3 Columbus square, Boston, but moved to Hopkinton, six miles from Framingham, a few years ago. He had a good-sized farm in Hopkinton. His family consisted of his wife and their one son.

Mr. Hayes was reckoned as one of the substantial citizens of Hopkinton, and he and his family were in the best local society.

Served in the Legislature.

Mr. Hayes was a Democrat in politics, but when he was living in Boston was elected to the Legislature in 1897 from a Republican Ward. He was active in getting passage of the school teachers' retirement fund bill.

His law office in the Tremont building is room 936. Mr. Hayes was counsel for an independent telephone company in Boston.

In 1907, Walter S. and J. Frank Hale, heirs to the big Hale estate in Haverhill, were sued by Mr. Hayes on the ground that, as counsel for them, he had effected a settlement of their claims to the Hale estate and was entitled, under an agreement with them, to a fee ranging from $125,000 to $200,000. Hayes' claim was reduced by the court to the comparatively insignificant amount of $1,000.

FEAR FOR ROYAL GEORGE.

Stranded Craft Leaking; May Stick on Rocks.

QUEBEC, Nov. 9.—The liner Royal George, stranded since Wednesday night on the rocks of the St. Lawrence, was taking water fast today and may be a total loss. The tugs alongside, however, waited the advent of high tide to try again to pull her clear. Throughout the night lighters worked continuously at removing the cargo.

REIGN OF TERROR IN TURKS' CAPITAL; MASSACRES BEGIN

Moslem Fanatics, Maddened by Perils From Bulgar Host Thundering at Very Gates of Constantinople, Mercilessly Slay by Score Native Women and Children of Christian Faith in City and Environs

Doom of City Believed Near as Allies Hurl Forces at Tchatalja Forts—Four Kings Plan State Entry as Soon as City Falls—Sultan Ready to Die in Palace and Refuses to Flee

ATHENS, Greece, Nov. 9.—The capitulation of the Turkish fortress of Salonica as well as Fort Karaburun has been signed, according to an official dispatch received by King George of Greece. Twenty-five thousand Turkish troops surrendered.

Special Cable to the Sunday American.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—The Reign of Terror, expected and dreaded as the climax of the Balkan war, the last act of the Turk in Europe before his banishment, has begun in Constantinople. Despatches from Bucharest, Vienna and Constanza, Roumania, say the Turkish soldiers have attacked the Christians.

Constantinople seems doomed tonight. The call for the Holy War, issued by the Sheik-Ul Islam, has sent thousands of fanatics wild and they are slaying native Christians, women and children, wherever they find them.

The fall of the Turkish capital is probably only a matter of hours, as the Bulgarians, aided by fresh Servian troops, are waging a fierce and final attack on the famous Tchatalja forts, the only remaining defences of the Porte.

The Sultan has determined not to be taken alive and will offer no security for the 6,000 Christians, provided the Bulgars enter the capital.

That such entry will be made is confirmed. King Nicholas of Montenegro, King Peter of Servia, and King George of Greece have formally accepted the invitation of King Ferdinand to accompany him when he takes formal possession of and occupies the city.

WARSHIPS READY TO LAND TROOPS.

The embassies in Constantinople are all under guard and the war ships standing in the harbor are preparing to land troops and take refugees on board.

Several buildings in the Turkish capital are reported in flames tonight.

Kiamil Pasha, the Turkish Grand Vizier, said today:

Do not think that either I or the Sultan will ever abandon Constantinople. My sovereign will await death in his palace and I in my office.

Turkey, according to the Grand Vizier, has resigned herself to the inevitable and, while her officials will do all in their power to preserve order, they can guarantee nothing.

Several detachments of well officered Turkish troops who have not yet joined the army are guarding the banks and embassies.

The whipped soldiers of the Sultan in the forefront of the retreat before the Bulgarians are arriving in Constantinople and camping in the streets. Even the call to a holy war has failed to enthuse many of the human wrecks to new energy.

There is but little food for them and no organized medical force to care for their wounds. Disease is rife among them.

King Ferdinand is sending his troops against the Tchatalja forts. Troops which were sent to the rear three days ago to rest and recuperate have been brought to the front and are bearing the brunt of the battle.

SERVIANS AIDING ATTACK OF BULGARS.

Every available force at the King's command has been sent into the fray. In addition there are large numbers of Servians in the field who were detached from the main Servian army at the fall of Uskub.

Nazim Pasha, at last reports, was still at Tchatalja, directing what remains of his army with a spirit of desperation. The surrender of Nazim Pasha is not expected, nor is his capture. The Bulgarian army has been into the forest region south of Derkos Lake, preparatory to advancing on Constantinople. The principal point of attack is the city of Tchatalja. The Turks' position there has not been completely pierced, but if the Bulgarians continue their attack through the night, the end of Turkish resistance is certain to come tomorrow.

BULGARIANS MAKING REPEATED CHARGES.

The Bulgarians are making repeated charges under cover of a ceaseless cannonade from their siege gun. The Turks have resisted desperately, their position having been improved somewhat by the arrival of reinforcing troops from Asia Minor which were landed on the Bosporus side of the Bosphorus and brought up from the rear.

In the meantime the forces besieging Adrianople are viciously attacking that city. After a deadly artillery duel today the Bulgars stormed Karatatepe and Papastepe, two of the outer forts, and charged them after a battle in which the Bulgars lost heavily but took the forts.

Report Peace Move by Turks.

Constantinople announced a brilliant victory for the Turks at Marash, near Adrianople, but no credence is given to this information. The Turks are completely on the defensive, and it is not believed that they are risking sallies from their position.

Massacres of Christians in other parts of the empire continue with fearful results. The most horrible event of the war

Elopers Are Married After Four Attempts

Boston Couple Had Fled to Maine, Boston and Providence in Vain.

BROCKTON, Nov. 9.—Albert E. Leonard eloped three times with the same girl, Miss Laura E. Rooney, and failed to get married. The fourth time he was successful. Only their extreme youth stood in the way of getting "hitched" the first time.

First they went to Portland, Me., where they tried it and after being refused were nearly arrested. They returned to Brockton, but remained but a short time when they tried it again in Providence and Nashua, N. H., but were again refused.

They sought the permission of their elders, which was given. This, together with the consent of the Probate Court allowed them to be married by the Rev. A. A. Fairbrother of this city.

HANGS HIMSELF IN CELL.

Worcester Man Uses Belt and Handkerchief for Noose.

WORCESTER, Nov. 9.—Martin O'Neil, thirty-five years old, of No. 33 Reading street, today committed suicide by hanging himself to a cell door in Police Headquarters. He used a belt and blue bandanna handkerchief, which he tied about his neck.

Earlier in the Day, O'Neil was arrested by Patrolman Tierney on a capias warrant issued by the Superior Court, for defaulting when his name was called to answer to a charge of drunkenness. O'Neil had been out on $500 bail.

STOPS TOBACCO HABIT

Elders' Sanitarium, located at 672 Main St., St. Joseph, Mo., has published a book showing the deadly effect of the tobacco habit, and how it can be stopped in three to five days.

As they are distributing this book free, anyone wanting a copy should send them their name and address at once. ***

BOY PLAYING TAG KILLED BY A CAR

Seven-Year-Old Randall Hurley, a "Christmas Baby," Run Down in Dorchester.

Seven-year-old Randall Hurley, one of the seven children of Mr. and Mrs. Michael T. Hurley, of No. 9 Grant street, Dorchester, and known to his playmates as "the Christmas baby," was run over by an electric car early last night on Dorchester avenue, near Harbor View street, in sight of several of his chums with whom he had been playing "tag." The boy died shortly after being taken from under the car.

Motorman John M. McDonald of Dorchester Lower Mills was arrested by the police of Station 11 and held on a technical charge of manslaughter.

In the crowd that gathered was H. J. Stebbins of No. 11 Sumner street, Dorchester. Stebbins was on his way home. In his pocket was his week's pay envelope, containing $21. As Stebbins stooped to help extricate young Hurley, the envelope dropped out of his pocket and was lost. Stebbins, like several other bystanders, crawled under the car, ruining his clothing.

Young Hurley was alive when taken from under the car. He died in the nearby office of Dr. John T. Trainor.

When the Hurley family heard the news, father, mother and the six other children—Emma, thirteen; Josephine, twelve; Margaret, ten; David, six; Joseph, three, and John, one year old—were heart-broken. Young Randall would have been eight years old on December 27. His mother always called him her "Christmas baby." That was what his playmates called him.

Mayor Fitzgerald Will Not Run Again

Declares He Can Conceive of no Condition That Might Arise That Would Force Him Into Race.

In a statement to the AMERICAN last night Mayor Fitzgerald set at rest any belief that might exist that he will be a candidate for Mayor again at the expiration of his present term.

"I can conceive of no condition that might arise that would cause me to become a candidate for mayor again," he said.

The Mayor's announcement is a definite answer to the rumor which have persisted since election day, that he would be a candidate to succeed himself.

Those who have circulated the rumor have based their contention on the fact that the Mayor, disappointed in his hopes of being the next United States Senator from Massachusetts through the election of a Republican Legislature, and not caring to run for Governor next year against David I. Walsh, had no other political course to pursue but to succeed himself.

Some time ago the Mayor announced that he would never seek the present office again. He is still of the same opinion.

"I have a number of big things under way which I hope to see through to a successful finish," the Mayor said last night, "but after that I am content to leave this office.

"This is an exacting office. I have very little time for my family except upon Sunday, and while there are many who have urged me to seek the honor again, I can see no reason why I should change my position."

The Mayor has a definite business career charted out for himself after he leaves City Hall. He does not propose to drop politics entirely, because he is still very much interested in the game, but he will not be the important personal factor in State and City politics that he has been in the past. His primary attention will be to business.

Although he declares he will not be a candidate again, the Mayor is not yet prepared to say whom he will support to succeed him at City Hall. There is little doubt that he will play a very important part in the selection of his successor, but whom he favors for the place he will not make known for many months.

Death Hushes Banjo of "Twin" Johnson

"Don't Cry for Me," Says Negro Street Singer, Victim of Pneumonia.

Men and women who have been accustomed to travel through West and Whiter streets, and other streets in that section of Boston, missed something last night. It was the twang of the banjo and the melodious voices of two negro street singers, popularly known as "The Twins."

One of them—George Johnson, the larger of the two men and a giant in stature—lay dead at his home, No. 18 Fay street, South End. Sam McLean, the other singer, sat near the body of his old comrade, disconsolate.

A week ago last night the two men gave their entertainment. Johnson complained of a cold which developed into pneumonia. He died last night. Before he passed away he called his wife and his old friend McLean to his bedside.

"Don't cry for me," he said, "I'm willing to go."

Johnson and McLean were well known by the college boys. The banjo twins for years took in the Harvard and Yale races at New London. They gave successfully on the stage a sketch called "On the Streets of Boston."

MASSACRES START AS TURKS MAKE LAST STAND

was the onslaught on Christians by the Turks before they surrendered Salonika. One report states that several Turkish officers have been shot by the Greeks for not preventing the butchery.

A report having official origin is to the effect that the Turkish government has today undertaken a police comparable with the Balkan states.

At an all-night meeting of the Young Turk government party committee on board the French cruiser Latouche Treville, it was decided to furnish arms to all foreign residents for self-protection.

Affairs are rapidly reaching a crisis in Constantinople. The vanguard of the retreating Turkish army has reached the capital, having behind it a swath of death and destruction. In the suburbs Christians are being killed.

Panic reigns even in official circles. With all the principal cities of European Turkey save Monastir, Adrianople, Scutari and Constantinople in the hands of the allies and with the fate of the latter in peril, the government forces now threaten sorties of the Bosphorus.

A segregated district has been set aside for the cholera patients as only the wounded Turkish soldiers. The medical authorities on board the warships in the harbor are co-operating with the Turkish authorities in an attempt to check the spread of the pestilence. The cholera quarter has been removed as far as possible from the foreign section.

Executions of Turkish soldiers and officers go forward daily. It is estimated that at least 600 men have been slain by death in the past seven days.

Every man over nineteen will be at hand to defend the city. Even with Tchataldja fallen, an effective resistance can be made. Every able-bodied man will fight.

200 Families Massacred.

BULGARIAN ARMY HEADQUARTERS, Strumnitza, Nov. 9.—Two hundred Christian families have been massacred by Turkish soldiers in the town of Bojudos on the sea of Marmora. A military dispatch from the front today stated that when a Bulgarian column entered the town they found it filled with the dead. Mussulmans had burned, pillaged and slain before fleeing from the Bulgars.

BELGRADE, Servia, Nov. 9.—"The League of the Balkan Nations is utterly opposed to making Albania an autonomous State, as desired by Germany, Austria-Hungary and Italy," said Premier Pashitch of Servia, in the course of an interview today.

SOFIA, Nov. 9.—The beaten Turkish army arrived at Tchataldja utterly demoralized and ready to fly even further, but the exhausted Bulgarians, happily for the Turks, have not pressed the pursuit from Tehorlu with the vigor which they exhibited in the earlier phases of the fight.

The reason for this is that the Bulgarians themselves were badly in need of rest and recuperation after the terrible sustained fighting of last week.

BELGRADE, Nov. 9.—Notification of Servia's annexation of a strip of Turkish territory extending south through Albania to the Aegean Sea, and another strip southwestward to the Adriatic Sea has been prepared in a note to the Powers.

Powers Order New Guns.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—A press report thsental Europe, which are sending doctors, states that Vickers (Ltd.) have recently received orders for 1080 new automatic rifle rather guns, the governments adopting the gun including five of the first-class powers of Europe. The new gun differs in many respects from the company's earlier types, being lighter and more mobile, while modifications have enabled the gun to continue firing for much longer periods without becoming overheated.

BALKAN MONARCHS TO ASSUME NEW TITLES

From the Special Correspondent of the Boston American and the London Daily Chronicle.

VIENNA, Nov. 9.—It is confirmed by the newspaper Minister, the Bulgarian official organ, that after the capture of Constantinople King Ferdinand of Bulgaria will proclaim himself Emperor, and will assume the title of Simeon the Second. He will also adopt the Orthodox faith.

King Peter of Servia on the same occasion, will take the title of King of All the Serbs.

The title of King George of Greece will be King of All the Hellenes.

King Nicholas of Montenegro will call himself King of Montenegro and Albania.

Another semi-official Bulgarian statement is to the effect that King Ferdinand, not intending to oppose the general desire of his army to enter Constantinople, will make a solemn entry in the Turkish capital accompanied by a legion of representatives of the other allies. These will include the Crown Prince Alexander of Servia and Crown Prince Constantine of Greece.

The Servian Premier declares Servia must have an outlet to the Adriatic between Alessio and Durazzo, the region being ancient Servian territory, which was conquered by the Turk 500 years ago.

The Austrian Minister to Servia has left Budapest with instructions to declare to the Servian Premier that Austria is earnestly desirous of maintaining with Servia the excellent and friendly relations which existed thirty-five years ago, when Count Andrassy was foreign minister.

Both the German and Italian ministers at Belgrade have likewise been instructed to intimate to the Servian government that the Powers forming the Triple Alliance are acting in solid unanimity in the matter of regulating Servia's future relations, and that they would consider Servia's appearance on the Adriatic as opposed to their interests.

There is no longer any doubt that Servia insists on occupying Durazzo, and the situation will become very serious, as Austria is backed by her allies.

AMERICAN RED CROSS AIDS THE SUFFERING

The American Red Cross has sent out a nation-wide appeal for funds to relieve "the appalling suffering involved in a Winter war in the Balkans."

Appeals for aid have come to the American Red Cross from the British Red Cross and the Red Cross societies of Continental Europe, which are sending doctors, nurses and hospital supplies. The American Red Cross, on account of the distance, will confine itself to sending cash.

President Taft issued a call to the State Boards of the American Red Cross. Acting on this call, the Massachusetts State Board, of which Governor Foss is President ex-officio, met, appointed a co-operating committee and arranged for forwarding to the East of all contributions.

The appeal by President Taft and the statement by the State Board is as follows:

The Appeal.

It is difficult to bring home to the public in this country the appalling suffering involved in a Winter war in the Balkans. Communication is difficult, the cold is intense, and even rudimentary transportation is a matter of extreme difficulty. Moreover, the fighting in this particular war is likely to be of an especially bitter and severe character, while on the other hand the medical organization available is quite inadequate to cope with the large numbers of wounded.

Reports have been received both from our diplomatic representatives in Turkey, the Balkan States and Greece, and from the Red Cross societies, of the desperate conditions of the thousands of sick and wounded, and the inadequate medical service. While these reports have come urgent appeals to the American Red Cross for aid.

The British Red Cross and those of Continental Europe are sending out medical detachments of doctors and nurses and hospital supplies in order to mitigate in some measure the terrible suffering entailed by such a Winter campaign.

Because of the distance, the American Red Cross will not send expeditions of trained personnel, but it earnestly appeals to the generosity of our people to aid the sick and wounded soldiers of all the countries involved.

Though an armistice may be declared, the great number of sick and wounded must be cared for during a number of weeks and the troops must remain under arms in the field for months during the severe Winter weather, with all the suffering and sickness this will entail.

The service of the American Red Cross will be rendered impartially to all the combatants concerned, but it is, of course, open to any subscriber to designate a donation for the special assistance of one or the other of the belligerent parties, and instructions to that effect will be strictly observed.

Committee Appointed.

The Massachusetts Board of the Red Cross, of which Governor Foss is president ex-officio and Gardiner N. Lane of Lee, Higginson & Co. is treasurer, met at the State House to take action upon the appeal of President Taft. A committee, consisting of: Mayor Fitzgerald, Cardinal O'Connell, Bishop Lawrence, Samuel R. Capen, William F. Pinkham, James Logan, Mrs. Maud Howe Elliott, Rev. A. Z. Conrad, Bishop Hamilton, Charles A. Stone, Rev. Vasa R. Prettingham, Henry B. Howe, Rev. George E. Horr, Samuel Bowles, Edwin U. Read, Eben D. Jordan, Frank B. Sanborn, A. Shuman, Galen L. Stone W. F. Harris and George W. Anderson was invited to confer with the committee. Rufus B. Tobey was chosen corresponding secretary. Invitations to contribute will be sent out immediately, and all checks should be made payable to the order of Gardiner N. Lane, treasurer, and sent to him at No. 44 State street, Boston.

Requests for aid should be sent to Rufus B. Tobey, No. 49 Federal street, Boston.

Local Appeal.

It was voted to send out the following as the initial appeal:

The Governor and members of the Massachusetts State Board and the undersigned urge upon the citizens of Greater Boston and of the Commonwealth to respond liberally. All subscriptions will be sent to the last dollar, as a fund is having been provided by the Massachusetts State Board for the payment of all expenses. Subscriptions should be sent to Gardiner M. Lane, treasurer, No. 44 State street, Boston.

Subscribers are asked to designate how they wish their subscriptions used, if they have any preference. Subscriptions will be acknowledged in the daily press.

GRAND VIZIER DECLARES NEITHER HE NOR SULTAN WILL FLEE FROM CAPITAL

PARIS, Nov. 9.—"I do not think that either I or the Sultan will ever abandon Constantinople. My sovereign will await death in the palace and I in my office."

This statement was made today in Constantinople by Grand Vizier Kiamil Pasha, according to a telegraphed from the Ottoman capital several days ago that he and the Sultan had given orders to the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus.

REGULAR STORY OF TURKISH OUTRAGES TOLD BY EYE WITNESS

LONDON, Nov. 9.—The war correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, with headquarters with the Greek army of the Epirus, sends the following story to his paper regarding the Turkish atrocities:

I think it my duty as one of your special correspondents and as an Englishman to ask you to use influence with your pages to bring home to our people and to the government of England the fact that terrible atrocities are being perpetrated daily by men in uniform calling themselves Turkish soldiers.

Such influence as Great Britain possesses should be brought to bear upon the Turkish government to order the immediate cessation of these atrocities, the mildest details of which you would hardly dare to print.

By the express wish of the general office of the army of Epirus I myself today held an impartial inquiry, as witness after witness was brought before me and cross-examined in Turkish, and also through an interpreter in Greek. They told their tale in the simplest language. They gave revolting details in cold, bare words. They had no idea of the purpose of their examination. There was no attempt to impress me with their story. I had, in fact, to drag it out of them.

The tales all tallied and I am prepared to pledge my word that their story is only a bald statement of facts.

Into the revolting details of the wild excesses of Turkish soldiery, egged on by their officers at Kumanadia, I cannot go. Suffice it is to say that men were treacherously murdered by wholesale, old men and women tortured to death with fire, young women and children maltreated with shocking cruelty; to add to this every portable object of value was stolen, and the rest of the village given to the flames.

"Don't Flirt," Says Dr. Briggs

Radcliffe Dean Warns Girls

Writes "Keep Your Souls White From Effort to Fascinate Men."

President LeBaron R. Briggs of Radcliffe, in his latest book, roundly condemns the girl flirt, though he does not express it just that way.

His styles it: "The deliberate, systematic and indiscriminate use of personal fascination—the use of power for the pleasure of exercising it and for no good end."

President Briggs, who is also Dean of the Harvard Faculty of Arts and Sciences, gives his book the title "Girls and Education." It is in the second chapter, addressed "To Schoolgirls at Graduation," that he scores the flirt. He writes:

"You go out of school into the world—all of you in some degree, and some of you in a high degree, to be cultivated women—with a power that a few of you are just beginning to know.

"Who is it that rules the world?"

and Major Henry Lee Higginson. "Doesn't everybody know," he added, "that it is women?"

The greater the power, the more dangerous. How should you use your power wisely and justly?

Let us begin with some of the uses that are unwise and unjust. One of the lowest of these is the deliberate, systematic and indiscriminate use of personal fascination—the use of power for the pleasure of exercising it and for no good end; the use of power that unsteadies men, right and left, and ends in an emptiness that makes you scorn yourselves.

Personal charm is one of the great and unexplained gifts of heaven.

Personal charm, self-recognized as part of one's capital, the power to fascinate men, consciously used to give zest to life, becomes almost despicable; at the very least it tends to make a girl useless and leads her to making men useless by distracting them; at the worst it wrecks homes and happiness.

I speak of something quite different from that desire to please which is born of courtesy and devotion, and which brings at length an honest charm of its own when the attraction of the professionally charming has lost its power over all who thoroughly know them. I have in mind those vain and foolish girls to whom the homage of men is the glory of womanhood.

"The Professional Beauty."

The professional beauty, though she often lacks personal charm, belongs in the same category, and what she puts her faith on is even more fleeting. Whatever you do, keep your souls white from the effort to fascinate men.

Writing of a girl's opportunities, Dean Briggs says:

"There is no getting around the fact that a girl is a girl, and that as such—whatever her character and her cleverness—she is hampered in the rough struggle for advancement, distinction and wealth. A few women of exceptional attainments and privileges earn large salaries; but compared with those who marry people who earn large salaries, their number is insignificant. Through marriage or inheritance, most women win such material wealth as they possess and with it such opportunities for culture and intellectual pleasure as well-to-do wealth affords. Yet in our country an unmarried girl, with only her own efforts to support her, may lift her life above its drudgery and may become in greater or less degree a cultivated woman.

Of Useless People.

Writing of useless people, the Dean quotes thus:

"'Don't you know that girl' said a gentleman, as he bowed to a strikingly handsome lady. 'She wins more at bridge than any other woman in Boston.'

"Even outside of the question of gambling," the writer continues, "there is something shocking in that kind of notoriety."

The Dean does not say whether the bridge-winning woman was an actual Boston person or whether he was merely citing an imaginary case.

Citing the benefits of college education for girls, the writer says woman have more petty jealousies than men, as follows:

"Take for instance, a matter in which there are probably more sinners among women than among men. I do not say that college life eradicates pettiness, but it ought to get out of any girls' head the wrong kind of sensitiveness and put in the right kind.

"By the wrong kind, I mean what exists to a pitiful extent among women otherwise good, the kind that buses itself with small questions of precedence. I have known women who really cared whether other women were asked to pour out tea oftener than they; I have known good women arranging a series of afternoon teas to think it vital that if Mrs. X were asked to pour out tea, Mrs. Y should be asked, and asked an equal number of times—even though Mrs. X was infinitely better fitted than Mrs. Y for that particular job."

Then the learned Dean adds, with a burst of feeling that will doubtless arouse the sympathy of all masculine readers:

"Both women, if you will pardon my saying it, cannot understand 'a good manly view' of people's mutual relations."

EPIGRAMS FROM DEAN BRIGGS' NEW BOOK ON 'GIRLS AND EDUCATION'

If you have dishes to wash and want to read poetry, wash the dishes first.

Most girls are not cultivated.

We read life illustrated scandals of sloping chorus girls or of their kinswomen in high life at Newport or New York.

Whatever you do (girls) keep your souls white from the effort to fascinate men.

It is ill for the nation that loses its poetic fervor.

The seashore, when it is not private property, becomes a place for clambakes, looping the loop and uncancealed love-making.

Nahant War Is Over, Lodge and 'Dan' Shake

Machine Boss and Finnerty Make Up at Dedication of Town Hall Over Which They Clashed.

Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, machine boss, and Daniel H. Finnerty, independent boss of Nahant, shook hands yesterday and the white dove of peace broods over that little area of land that sticks out into the sea.

The dove got busy immediately after the famous now town hall, which cost $75,000, was dedicated and properly eulogized by the Senator. There had been a good deal of trouble over the town hall.

Finnerty wanted a new one. Some of the people wanted the old one fixed up. Lodge was neutral on this point, but he and Finnerty clashed over the location of the hall. Finnerty won in getting a new hall and Lodge won on the location.

So, yesterday, after the Senator had praised the system of town government and the new town hall, Finnerty, the father of the structure, so to speak, stepped up to the Senator and said:

"That was a great speech, Senator."

"Thank you, Dan," cordially replied the orator.

The two powers of Nahant then shook hands.

The speeches opened with a parade of the police and fire departments, headed by the Lynn Cadet Band, through the principal streets. Chief Thomas H. Larkin of the police led the parade.

Arriving at the Town Hall the procession disbanded, and the Rev. Francis P. Hannawin of St. Thomas Catholic Church offered prayer. Samuel Hammond, chairman of the town building committee, turned the keys of the new hall over to Charles R. Vary, chairman of the Board of Selectmen.

TURKEYS 'UNSETTLED' BEFORE THANKSGIVING

Naturally, They Would Be, but We Are Referring to the Price You'll Have to Pay.

"What will Boston housewives have to pay for their Thanksgiving turkey?"

This question, put to a dozen poultry dealers in the big markets of Boston yesterday, brought forth the same answer in every instance:

"I wish I knew."

It seems that the turkey market is in a very unstable condition just now, with varying reports of the quantities available in the Western wholesale markets. One commission agent comes back with a report that there are plenty of turkeys in Chicago and St. Louis, and another comes back and says there are practically none in the country.

No Vermont or Rhode Island turkeys have come into the Boston market at all, and only a few are expected. These will come in a few days before Thanksgiving and will all be spoken for before they arrive.

Just now Western turkeys are selling at 30 cents a pound, and it is possible that they will not go higher before Thanksgiving, but the market is in such an unsettled state that there will be some advance in the prices, and it would not be surprising if there was a very sharp jump.

MRS. J. J. O'DONNELL, BRIDE IN ROMANCE OF CANOBIE LAKE

MRS J J O'DONNELL

Rescue From Lake Results in Wedding

J. J. O'Donnell Marries Miss Hey Whom He Saved in Canoe Accident.

A romance which had its inception when Miss Grace M. Hey of Lawrence was rescued from drowning in Canobie Lake, N. H., by John J. O'Donnell of Brookline nine years ago, culminated in the marriage of the couple on October 23 at the rectory of St. Mary's Church, Lawrence, by the Rev. F. Loomis. Announcement of the marriage was made yesterday.

The bride, in company with a friend, was canoeing. Mr. O'Donnell was in another canoe when the boat in which Miss Hey was seated capsized. O'Donnell dove into the water and, after righting the craft, placed her in it. The engagement was announced on March 17. Mrs. O'Donnell is a graduate of the Lawrence High School in the class of 1902, and Mr. O'Donnell is a graduate of the Lowell Commercial College. They are living at No. 1 Davis avenue, Brookline.

THE TURK DESTINED TO VANISH FROM EUROPE SAYS D'ANNUNZIO

Triumph of a New Idea Involved in Balkan War, Says Famous Author

By GABRIELLE D'ANNUNZIO.

THE peoples of Europe, under the impulse of some spirit of aberration, appear to be stumbling giddily into blind adventures.

The trumpets of the four winds of the world
From the ends of the earth blow battle.

The night is broken eastward . . But, in reality, the wondrous rhythm of Destiny—against which neither fault nor deceit avails—guides events to the days which are upon us. Not a movement of generosity, not a humane sentiment in that Europe so well armed and so cowardly which—by an inversion of the hard saying of one of your statesmen—seems to think that "cowardice ensures peace."

One feels tempted to put to it the poet's interrogation, "Europe, what of the night?" But what could it answer? One single thing, perhaps: "Night with pestilent breath feeds us . . Life where we triumph is dead." Nevertheless our heart trembles in looking upon the ideal image of that one among these nations whom Destiny appears to have chosen in this magnificent hour.

There is one who shall surely require
All that endure or that err.
She can answer alone . .

Each Race Has a Genius to Guide.

How will she reply? One must think that each noble race has its tutelary genius which walks hand in hand with danger, while short-sighted politicians and the wooden-headed delegates are laboriously negotiating an untimely peace at Ouchy; it must have been this inviolable genius which prevented this sudden treason, as it were, on the part of a young nation, avenged and free, towards two young nations thirsting for vengeance and liberty.

There is not a proud heart in Italy and elsewhere but suffered from this abominable attempt. I can state that to the great majority of the Italian people this slow, mean haggling is repugnant and that it awaits the news of the breaking off of the negotiations at last with quivering anxiety.

This breaking off must take place tomorrow. All our most ardent wishes desire it. Italy, living and true, the new Italy, enlightened by her opened veins more than by the rays of her sun, will with a single movement brush aside the official gnats, "blind flesh-flies hatched by dark and hampered in their husk," and throw herself into the vaster combat with a still cheerier courage. She may truly, as regards these tiresome and the captious negotiations, repeat the saying of Sigismondo Malatesta: "Non timeo cuiless." (I do not fear gnats.)

How Could She Sign Peace at the Present?

How indeed could she sign peace when already the troops of the Balkan States are in conflict with the Ottoman hordes and the red banner with the white cross (red with the blood of the hearts which perished for it, white as the untrodden mountain tops), the gonfalon of the heroic shepherds unfurls and flaps in the wind of the first victory, fresher than the breath of the dawn and the quiver of the sea?

Those who love her with the most faithful love asked themselves yesterday with anguish whether truly she could at this supreme hour abandon the Christian peoples who are uprising with so splendid a violence to claim their national liberties against overlords who are even harder than the ancient oppressors of Lombardy and Venetia.

Could she turn aside from their distress and think of nothing but her "interests," following the example of that ignoble European plutocracy which weaves colossal crime on its noiseless looms? Would she not betray her own cause by betraying so great a cause of others?

Yesterday, in the Roman Capitolium, in the Hall of the Horatii and the Curiatii, before the testimony of three incomparable civilizations, were assembled men who aside the official gnats, "blind flesh-flies hatched by dark and hampered in their husk," and throw herself into the vaster combat with a still cheerier courage. She may truly, as regards these tiresome and the captious negotiations, repeat the saying of Sigismondo Malatesta: "Non timeo cuiless." (I do not fear gnats.)

How Could She Sign Peace at the Present?

How indeed could she sign peace when already the troops of the Balkan States are in conflict with the Ottoman hordes and the red banner with the white cross (red with the blood of the hearts which perished for it, white as the untrodden mountain tops), the gonfalon of the heroic shepherds unfurls and flaps in the wind of the first victory, fresher than the breath of the dawn and the quiver of the sea?

GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO

The Greeks, intoxicated with glorious memories, sustained by invigible hope, appear to regard Athens as a provisional capital and think of the reconstitution of the Empire, which should contain Constantinople, as they hold themselves to be the legitimate heirs of Philip and the Byzantine Emperors, and until 1909 all the enemies of the Turk called themselves Greeks, all fraternizing in the vast orthodox unity.

The Serbs, since the Treaty of Berlin, by putting Bosnia and Herzegovina in the claws of Austria, "cut away their hopes to the very root," have had their eyes directed toward the Archipelago, along the Valley of the Vardar and the railway from Belgrade to Salonica. They have not forgotten that Uskub was formerly the capital of Great Servia and that it still displays the ruins of the towers built by the formidable Tsar Stephan Douchan.

The Bulgarians, of still more striking originality amid the other

A Great Cry Arose: "Vive la Greece!"

And from the sacred hill the thought of these lofty men of intelligence who had come to Rome from all parts of the world turned with a sudden fervor toward the Acropolis. And a cry arose, an irresistible cry: "Vive la Grece!" And this cry, thrice repeated, resounded on the immovable rock, and the people heard it, and for the fourth time sent it up to the Latin sky with a longer and deeper vibration.

That is the most splendid cry at the present moment.

We have named it of old by name.
The land of the royalist race,
The most holy land.

The splendors and the people did not consider the bitter struggle of races, but greeted the power of an eternal idea, evoked the sublime Parthenon which was sullied by barbarians and infidels, that pinnacle of reason which may tomorrow be once more sullied by the bestial enemy under the very eyes of that same avaricious and arid Europe which, after having allowed the last sign of the Byzantine Empire to be overthrown, trembled at the news of the Turkish victory and feared the eruption of the Janissaries into the Hungarian and German chapels!

It is not a question merely of a bitter contest between the races. It is a question of the triumph of a living and ever new idea, of the affirmation and exaltation of a moral and intellectual force, sprung from the reasoned adhesion of free men to principles which formed the foundation of ancient greatness, and are still the immutable basis of European civilization.

Against It the Base Rancor of Politicians.

Doubtless, great and proud dreams spring from this idea, enlarging and transfiguring it. Against these great and guiding images is today awakened the base rancor of politicians and bankers full of guile both.

"Allies Will Restore Beauty of Saint Sofia as Christian Basilica" races, have no lesser ambitions as they recall that the Treaty of San Stefano assigned to them a territory extending from the Danube to the Archipelago and embracing Macedonia and a part of Thrace. They also recall that under the dynasty of the Assanides, the Rumano-Bulgarian Empire more than once made the masters of Byzantium tremble on their throne, and that John Assan II. saw his dominions extend from the Danube to Larissa.

They Have Kept the Consciousness of Origin.

And have not the descendants of the Roman legionaries been able to preserve, since the days of Aemilius Paulus, Trajan and Aurelian, through the terrible storms of two thousand years, the keen consciousness of their origin? Have they not retained the memory of those two Asanide brothers, the shepherds of immense flocks, refusing to pay the tithe to Byzantium, invaded Hemus and conquered the entire region lying between the Danube, the Balkans, Rhodope and Macedonia?

Each of these peoples, still young, forges a new right with an old memory, and it is a beautiful thing that young warriors should fight for the inmost dream of their race and that they should invoke the most remote glory of their ancestors. It is a beautiful thing that the name and holy image of Hellas should still be with them as in the song of one of the forerunners of the Greek Revolution, poet Rigas, a Roumanis of Thessaly:

Bulgars and Albanians, Serbs and Roumanians,
Epirotes and Islanders, with one accord
Draw for liberty your sword.
Hellas calls and beckons you!

But another name also, an image no less sacred, must be with them in this supreme trial, the name and the image of Italy, the name and the image of Rome, since everywhere in the Carpathians, Balkans and Pindus appear the hard traces of the eagles and engraved signs of Latin speech.

What matters it that the horizon is shrouded and the chances uncertain? What matters it that the atrocious adversary should be covered by the European plutocracy which aims only at sharing out his dispecta membra, with no thought of rights and dreams, of the bloodshed and the sacrifice accomplished? The last word has not yet been said and sometimes the unexpected word is pronounced by an inexorable will.

The Confederation Pays No Heed to Them.

The accord of the Powers, whose interests are contradictory, could only take place on negations, not affirmations and acts. Look at them. They are mutually on the watch to prevent each other doing anything.

But the swift and audacious Confederation pays no heed to them. Forward it goes, its eyes fixed on its goal, with a stout heart and with set teeth. It knows its own history and that of the enemy. It knows that this enemy was never able to strike deep root in the conquered soil, was never skilful in anything but pillage, never founded anything, but everywhere brought ruin and left no grass even to grow under his feet.

It knows that this enemy has always remained in Europe, a hateful stranger, destined to disappear, recalling always, notwithstanding his ruses and his fury, notwithstanding the dissension of the Christians. Just as he lost Hungary and the Crimea, just as he lost Greece, Servia, Montenegro and then Roumania, Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia, so he will lose Constantinople. Like Sinan Pacha in the song of the deeds of the voivode, Michel, "he will cast himself into the mud, will be covered with filth like swine, will lose his turban and feredge, will die choked in slime and there will lose his lies and his designs."

The Musulman Lime Now Cracking Away.

The Musulman lime, with which Mahomet the Conqueror caused the mosaics of Justinian to be covered, is now cracking away and falling miserably. The Latin images already reappear as brilliant as formerly. And four cannon shots suffice to bring down the four minarets and restore to Saint Sophia its beauty as a Christian Basilica.

Then, in memory of the valor of the old King Nikita, the father of their gentle queen, the Italians will desire to place on the purified altar that image of the miraculous Virgin which the angels carried from Scutari to the gates of Rome when these dogs of infidels invaded Albania. And suddenly uprising from the deepest glory of the sea the doge Dandolo, "Lord of a fourth and a half of the Empire," will come to bend the knee in silence and fulfill his vow.

HOUGHTON & DUTTON

FORTIETH ANNI

To the People of New England

Forty years ago I started on its business career the firm now known as Houghton & Dutton Co.

It is with feelings of profound gratitude that I review the record of almost half a century. What finer evidence is needed to prove that if you treat the public well it will treat you well? It has been my aim to build up our business on honor, to win and deserve the unwavering confidence and support of the public.

Our low cash prices and high quality merchandise were not sufficient in themselves to accomplish this. There were a thousand other additional ways in which the interests of the public were to be conserved and our mutual interests promoted. For this I have toiled, and that my efforts have not failed, the experiences of our clientele and the mammoth proportions our business has assumed, bear tangible witness on this our 40th Anniversary.

With a heart full of sincere appreciation I return my thanks to our numberless patrons, assuring them that there will be no change in this declared policy of the firm.

My three sons, who are associated with me in the business, are animated by the same business ideals and desires, and in asking for the continued support of the public, I can most confidently guarantee that its interests will be served to the very limit of our ability.

Benjamin F. Dutton

PROFIT SHARING—In addition to the remarkably low prices at which we sell all merchandise, we believe in returning a share of the profits to our customers, and do so in the form of Legal Stamps, which are equal to an actual cash discount.

HINT OF DIVORCE STIRS NORTH SHORE FRIENDS OF M'KEES OF PITTSBURGH

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas M. McKee of Pittsburgh, who have been spending their Summers at Pride's Crossing, on the North Shore, are much disturbed by rumors of their separation and possible divorce proceedings.

Their son, H. Sellers McKee, is a senior at Harvard College. According to the son, Mrs. McKee has not filed any action so far. He says:

No, my mother has not begun suit for divorce yet. I cannot say when she will, or if she will ever do so. In any event, we do not care to make public any matters concerning the family. If a divorce action is filed, then that will be time to talk about such matters, and not before.

Young McKee left his apartment in the dormitory at No. 58 Mt. Auburn street, Cambridge, yesterday, for Pittsburgh. It was said he would be gone three days, but that the reason for his going was not known.

The sudden closing of the McKee country place at Pride's Crossing three weeks ago, when it had been planned to keep it open till Christmas; the dismissal of servants, and the giving of separate addresses for husband and wife in New York city are among the circumstances which give rise to the present reports.

Significant, also, is the statement that the Pride's Crossing house is to be leased or sold next season.

One morning last August, following a family dispute, a young woman who has acted as social secretary to Mrs. McKee and who also had tutored the son, left the McKee place early in the day.

Maid Was Dismissed.

On Saturday, October 19, just three weeks ago yesterday, Mr. McKee left home in an automobile, accompanied by his valet. He was driven to the railroad station at Pride's Crossing, boarded a train for Boston and went through to New York. He had planned to spend the week-end at Pride's Crossing, but returned to Manhattan instead.

On the same day a young and pretty French girl, who had been Mrs. McKee's maid for several months, was dismissed.

Mrs. McKee had intended to stay at Pride's Crossing until the holidays, when she intended to join her husband in New York, with their son coming to the city also.

But soon after Mr. McKee's sudden departure on October 19 Mrs. McKee began hurried preparations to leave. She ordered all her personal belongings packed. On October 22, the Tuesday after her husband left, Mrs. McKee departed for New York and the house was closed for the Winter. Doors were boarded up and all windows were screened with a heavy blue cloth. The place was left in charge of Theodore Vonbriesli, the head gardener, who has been there ten years.

Mrs. McKee left word that her address in New York would be No. 22 West Fifty-fifth street.

Mr McKee wrote back last week for the caretaker to send him a flat-topped walnut desk and chairs which he had used in his library. The address he gave, to which the desk and chairs were to be sent, is No. 20 West Forty-fourth street, which is eleven city blocks from the address his wife left.

The inference drawn by people in Pride's Crossing and neighboring Beverly is that Mr. McKee and Mrs. McKee are not at the same address now.

McKee Likes the West.

It is also reported that Mr. McKee was out of sympathy with his wife's social activities. He did not mind the cost, high though it has been, but he did not find the old Boston and North Shore set so congenial as the more breezy Western coterie.

This difference between the Eastern and Western sets along the North Shore has caused much useful friction. Scores of the so-called "old families" in the East have held aloof from rich newcomers from Chicago, Pittsburgh and the West.

Mrs. McKee, it is believed, liked the Eastern families and desired their friendship and intimacy. Having been located at Pride's Crossing for ten Summers, she felt herself at least not a stranger.

But Mr. McKee preferred the more strictly Western coterie and did not beam upon his wife's brilliant hospitality to the more conservative New Englanders.

'He Didn't Know 'Twas Loaded' But the Boy Killed His Sister

GRACE WEBSTER, ACCIDENTALLY SHOT BY BROTHER

RALPH WEBSTER AND GRACE WEBSTER

LOWELL, Nov. 9.—Little Grace Webster lies dead at her home in Billerica, shot by her brother Ralph, another victim of the boy who did not know that the weapon was loaded.

The tragedy has almost killed the mother of the children, Mrs. J. Clifford Webster, an invalid from paralysis. Ralph is broken hearted. He cries and moans constantly that he did not mean to harm his sister.

Max Morley, a boy who lives next door to the Websters, called at their home. He carried a rifle with him. The weapon was stood against a wall. When the Morley boy was about to start for his home, Ralph Webster grabbed the rifle and in a spirit of fun pointed it toward his sister. He pulled the trigger. There was a sharp report and the little girl tumbled to the floor.

The bullet from the weapon entered her head over the left eye, penetrating the brain. She died instantly. A doctor was summoned, but he could do nothing.

Grace was her mother's faithful companion, helping her about the house and attending to her wants. The invalid is under the care of a physician.

TO CONFER ON CANAL.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—President Taft, Secretary of State Knox and James Bryce, the British ambassador, probably will begin Monday a discussion of Great Britain's protest against the Panama Canal bill. Mr. Knox is expected back in Washington Monday.

CLERGYMAN AND GIRL ARRESTED IN STRIKE

LITTLE FALLS, N. Y., Nov. 9.—Robert A. Bakeman, a former Schenectady clergyman, son of the Rev. F. W. Bakeman of Chelsea, Mass., has been held on a charge of assault, and Miss Helen J. M. Schloss, formerly visiting nurse, has been held on a charge of inciting riot here during the textile strike. Miss Schloss is in jail here. Bail will be fixed later.

Miss Schloss came here from New York a few months ago. She left her work when the strike started, and marched with the strikers. Four more prisoners taken in connection with the riot will be examined today. William E. Haywood has arrived here and assumed the management of the strike. He said that the labor situation was the same as that at Lawrence, Mass., and he would remain in the city until the strike was settled.

JOHNSON MUST STAY IN JAIL OVER SUNDAY

CHICAGO, Nov. 9.—Jack Johnson attempted to secure his release today through a writ of habeas corpus, but Judge Carpenter denied the writ. Federal judges having jurisdiction in Johnson's case left the federal building at noon and Johnson will have to remain in jail over Sunday at least.

Mrs. Catherine Dorsey, at whose flat Lucille Cameron at one time lived, is held under $5,000 bond as a witness in the Johnson case. She asserted today that she knew nothing of Johnson.

She says she once went with Nellie Cameron to the Cafe de Champion, and there was introduced to Johnson. She never saw him again, she says. It was intimated at the office of the Federal District Attorney, however, that the woman might be able to give some extremely important information.

Quick Action Prescription Cures Colds in a Day

The best and quickest prescription known to medical science for colds and coughs is as follows: "From your druggist get two ounces of Glycerine and half an ounce of Globe Pine Compound (Concentrated Pine). Take these two ingredients home and put them into a half pint of good whiskey. Shake it well. Take one or two teaspoonfuls after each meal and at bed time. Smaller doses to children according to age." He sure to get only the genuine Globe Pine Compound (Concentrated Pine). Each half ounce bottle comes in a tin screw-top sealed case. Any druggist has it on hand or will quickly get it from his wholesale house. There are many cheaper preparations of large quantity, but it don't pay to experiment. This treatment is certain cure. This has been published here for six Winters and thousands say it has no equal.

A Rousing Appetite Is a Keen Delight

And What Is of Greater Interest, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets Enable the Stomach to Digest Whatever Is Eaten.

We all like to see the way healthy children devour their meals. Would we could all do the same! Eating ought to be a delight. It is one of life's chief enjoyments. People who cannot relish a good meal are apt to fall into those ill-tempered moods from which they view the world as a sorry place to live in. So let us learn to employ the best means of harmonizing our existence and thus extract from our daily grind all the pleasure there is to be had. This we can do by keeping our stomachs in prime, active working order.

A majority of people have come to know the blessings which an occasional use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets confer upon the stomach. They are unquestionably the most popular remedy known, for the reason that dyspepsia is the national disease, and these wonderful little tablets have long since acquired a nations' reputation as a thoroughly reliable and efficient cure for all forms of dyspepsia and indigestion.

No matter how great the excess of food taken into the stomach, one or two of these tablets will digest every particle of it. A package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets should always be in the house. Many a person has saved himself from a serious attack of acute indigestion by using them after heavy meals, such as are eaten Christmas, New Year's, Thanksgiving and other holidays and festal seasons.

After attending banquets, late suppers, heavy fancy dinners, after-theater parties, etc., where one has dined sumptuously and luxuriantly, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets should invariably be used, as they digest the food perfectly and completely, and prevent all possibility of dyspepsia, which, without their use, is more than likely to ensue.

Americans are exceedingly fond of the good things of life, and there is apt to be great excess of eating, and the only way to overcome its bad effects on the stomach is to employ a powerful and efficient digestive such as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which always insure a good digestion.

Business Man Gets Great Benefit

JAMES EGGAN, MGR.
Merchants Distributing Association.

"It is the best tonic a man can take for a rundown condition," he says of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey.

Men of positions of importance are not free with testimonials of indorsement as a rule, and when they do speak it is generally because they are deeply impressed.

We find this is especially so in matters pertaining to health.

Men as a rule pass over trifling ailments, but when they find themselves seriously ill they see in a new light where those dependent upon them stand.

When men recover from conditions of serious illness they are thankful and wish to help their fellow men. It is in this generous spirit that Mr. James Eggan, Manager of the Merchants Distributing Association of Boston, Mass., so highly indorses

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

There are thousands of hard working men and women who do not break down altogether, but who are near it, who can profit by Mr. Eggan's advice. At first they are merely run down and tired out. Perhaps you are one of these. If you are, begin today to use the greatest tonic stimulant known. It will improve your appetite and digestion, which will help make new rich blood and rebuild the wornout tissues and feed your starving nerves, which are sending out warnings.

All druggists, grocers, and dealers, $1.00 a large bottle. Medical booklet and doctor's advice sent free on application.

The Duffy Malt Whiskey Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Mr. Eggan's Letter

"I have been taking Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey for the last 6 months and find it a grand tonic to build up a person who is run down as I was. I find it is the best tonic a man can take for a run down condition."

SAYS CRANE RETIRED TO SAVE HIS LIFE

Warned by Physician Contest for Seat Might Be Fatal Because of Poor Condition.

Here is the real reason why United States Senator Winthrop Murray Crane decided to retire from that body, as told to a reporter for the Sunday AMERICAN by a close personal friend of the junior Senator, who holds a high and influential position in the Republican party in the State and nation.

Senator Crane decided to retire from the Senate at the end of his present term because of his health. He has been in poor health for some time. His heart is not strong. For the past year he has been under the constant watch of his physicians.

When it became apparent that there would be a contest for Senator Crane's seat he conferred with his physicians. They advised him that he was in no condition to enter into a spirited political fight. He was plainly told that he could not enter the fight if he wished to live.

The junior Senator decided that life was sweeter than a re-election to the Senate and accordingly made known his intention to retire at the end of his present term.

There is absolutely no truth to the reports that he made his decision because he believed that the Legislature would pass the senatorial preference primary act, and he was afraid to go before the voters of the State. He is not that kind of a man. Anyone who knows him well knows that he has never been afraid of a fight and that he is not the kind of a man to "lie down" in any political contest.

Mayor and Vorenberg to Confer on Traffic

Merchant to Submit Plans for Solving the Annoying Downtown Problem.

Felix Vorenberg of the F. Vorenberg Company, yesterday requested a conference with Mayor Fitzgerald on the matter of relieving congestion in the downtown district. His letter to the Mayor says:

I see that you have taken up the matter regarding the congestion in the downtown district, and I trust you will give your special attention to the district that is suffering more than any, viz., Winter street.

The Boston AMERICAN took this matter up some time ago, and I am enclosing a copy of an interview they had with me at that time, which, I think, explains my views as well as those of the merchants around here.

I also had an interview at various times with the Commissioner of Police, Commissioner of Public Buildings and street commissioners and hope that with your usual energy at getting at things, you will find some way of overcoming the terrible annoyance to merchants and the public at large. Would be glad to see you regarding this matter. Respectfully yours,

FELIX VORENBERG.

The Mayor will confer with Mr. Vorenberg on the matter some day this week.

HAS 100th BIRTHDAY PARTY.

Five Generations at Fete for Mrs. Urquhart.

WEYMOUTH, Nov. 9.—Having passed the century milestone of her life yesterday, Mrs. Sarah Urquhart today received additional evidence of the friendships formed during many years. The 100th birthday of the remarkable woman was passed in the company of children, grandchildren, great grandchildren and great great grandchildren—five generations being present at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Laura T. McQuinn. Mrs. Urquhart had fifteen children, thirty-four grandchildren, seventeen great grandchildren and two great great grandchildren. "I live only one day at a time," said the aged woman, "and I enjoy each one as it comes and goes."

20,000 SUFFRAGISTS MARCH IN TRIUMPH

Great New York Parade Marks Victory in Four More States.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—In a glow of brilliant light and color 20,000 New York Equal Suffragists tonight celebrated the victory of last Tuesday, when the States of Oregon, Michigan, Kansas and Arizona voted to give full suffrage to their women.

From 8 o'clock, when the big torchlight Woman's Suffrage procession moved down Fifth avenue from Fifty-eight street, until after midnight, when the last tired Suffragette departed for home, a glow of red light covered the district from Fifty-ninth street to Union Square and from Fifth avenue to Broadway.

Five thousand Japanese lanterns were carried by the marching forces, one hundred pounds of red powder were burned along the line of march, a number of flaming torches were carried by the 5,000 men in line, while mirror lamps worn in the hats of scores of male marchers, and thousands of red, white and green lanterns helped illumine the triumphal march of the Suffragettes down the avenue.

Twenty Meetings in Union Square.

Union Square, where twenty big meetings were addressed by prominent men and women speakers at the close of the parade, was a blaze of color. Along Broadway decorated with bunting floating woman suffrage speakers, one automobile to each block and worth to Long Acre Square, furnished the second part of the evening's celebration.

Mrs. James Lee Laidlaw was chairman of the parade. Beatrice Forbes Robertson Hale, mounted on a white charger, was grand marshal.

Riding immediately behind the grand marshal were mounted women. Then came a group of women trumpeters, gowned in white and wearing a wreath of green leaves. Next in line was a chorus of 150 young women in white and gold chanting the woman suffrage hymn.

Six Golden Chariots.

They were followed by six golden chariots drawn by white horses, driven by women in Greek costume. The chariots represented the six States where women already vote, and were driven by Miss Ines Mulholland, Miss Gwendolyn Brooks, Miss Lena Putnam, Mrs. Florence Cooley and Mrs. Mary Austin.

The new women suffrage States were represented by four floats, which Miss Lola La Follette, daughter of the Wisconsin Senator, and other well-known women put together themselves with a hammer and saw.

Governor-elect Sulzer marched at the head of the Democratic division; Miss Martha Reinhardt and Miss Alice Carpenter led a delegation from the Progressive party, wearing Bull Moose hats; William Amos headed the Republican delegation, and Charles Edward Russell, the Socialist party division.

Among the marchers were Mrs. Henry Wise Miller and Miss Caroline Dow, cousins of Mrs. Charles a Mackay; Mrs. A. Barton Hepburn, Mrs. Richard Aldrich, Mrs. Charles Tiffany, Mrs. Lewis L. Delafield, Mrs. James B. Reynolds, Mrs. Calvin Tompkins, Mrs. Carrol Rockwith, Mrs. G. R. Post, Mrs. R. Livingston Ilmit, Mrs. James Geer and Mrs. James Duane Livingston.

Middleboro Elks' Memorial.

MIDDLEBORO, Nov. 9.—Middleboro lodge of Elks will observe memorial Sunday on December 1, and an elaborate musical program is being arranged. The orator will be Hon. William A. Pollard, ex-Mayor of New Bedford. The committee comprises Luke F. Kelley, E. Frank LeBarron, and Harry Thibodeau.

Dr. Hartman Answers Some Letters Asking for Medical Advice

S. B. HARTMAN, M. D.

S. B. Hartman, M. D., Columbus, Ohio, known all over the world, probably has the largest correspondence of any doctor in this country. He has a corps of trained assistants to dispose of the letters received each da . Of course the doctor cannot personally answer all of these letters, but other doctors in his employ for over twenty-five years attend to the details. Occasionally, however, a letter is brought to the doctor himself for answer. A few of the letters answered personally by Dr. Hartman in his regular correspondence are given below as samples of the letters he is answering every day. The names and addresses of the writers of these letters of course are withheld, as the doctor treats all professional correspondence with him as strictly confidential. No one need fear that his name or address will be used when writing to Dr. Hartman.

A MOTHER:—I have raised several children, and during the time when milk was their principal diet I have had trouble to keep their bowels regular. Constipation has been the only serious difficulty I have had to contend with. What do you suggest as a remedy for a child three years old that is continually constipated?

I believe my remedy Manalin is adapted to your wants exactly. To be sure, there are several other remedies for constipation, especially prepared for children, advertised. I am sure, however, that Manalin is just as good as any other remedy on the market, just as palatable, just as effective, and a bottle of Manalin contains two or three times as much medicine as the usual bottle of laxative for babies. In these days of high cost of living the price of a medicine is worth looking after. Manalin can be obtained at any drug store.

A YOUNG MAN:—I have a letter from a young man who is apparently the victim of blood poison in its worst form. He is afflicted with deep eating ulcers, has taken the usual remedies from doctors, both patent medicines and regular doctor's prescriptions. He writes me:

Dear Doctor Hartman: Is there anything I can do? Must I be eaten up alive with the awful ulcers that I have brought on myself by dissolute living? I can get no relief from doctors or drugs.

To this I made reply:

Dear Sir: I would send to the drug store at once and get a bottle of Lacupin. Begin by taking a tablespoonful after each meal and at bedtime. Continue this for one month, without interruption, and then write me and I will give you further advice. As to your diet, I would suggest the use of one fresh, raw vegetable every day, such as lettice, celery, onion, radishes, or the like. Also, use meat very sparingly, if at all. Fresh buttermilk with at least one meal a day. You can eat fish as freely as you like.

A YOUNG LADY:—A young lady writes: I have pimples on my face and shoulders, especially in the spring of the year, but more or less all the time. Sometimes a few blackheads will form, but mostly the pimples are large and red. Is there anything I can do to get rid of them?

Dear Madam: You should do everything possible to regulate the organic functions of your body. The bowels should be kept regular. The diet should consist largely of fresh raw vegetables, fruits and outdoor exercise should be taken every day. Everything that worries or frets the mind should be strictly avoided. If you will follow this for one month and take a tablespoonful of Peruna before each meal, you may then write me again and I will give you further advice. I prefer not to recommend any local treatment for the pimples until after you have followed this advice for one month.

AN OLD MAN:—An elderly gentleman writes me:

Dear Doctor Hartman: I know how strong and well you are, although you are much older than I am. I envy you your magnificent health. Do you have any special system of physical culture to ward off old age? I am ten years younger than you are, and yet I am comparatively broken down by old age. What would you advise me to do?

My Dear Sir: I do not teach any system of physical culture. The only physical culture I believe in is to have something to do every day that calls into play both the mental and physical powers. Something that you are interested in. Something you believe in. Eat frugally. At your age use meat sparingly. Make no use of narcotics of any sort. Drink cold water freely, and if you wish to do exactly as I do, keep a bottle of Peruna in the house all the time. At the slightest appearance of cold, or sneezing, or cough, chill, or stomach derangement, take a dose of Peruna before each meal for a few days until the symptoms disappear. Also use the cold water sponge bath every morning, described in the Ills of Life, sent gratis.

FROM A DOCTOR:—A doctor writes me as to the remedy Katarno:

I have been reading your articles in the newspapers lately and I see that you are putting up the old-time Peruna under a new name. While the old-time Peruna was in its glory I used to prescribe it frequently for my patients. But since the change made in the formula in which a laxative was added, I have not been certain whether I had better prescribe it or not. I am anxious, however, to prescribe Katarno, for I believe it to be one of the best tonics I ever knew of. In doing this can I send my patients to the drug store, or must they go to McDonald-Steube Co., as heretofore? In your letter?

My Dear Doctor:—All wholesale druggists keep Katarno. Any retailer who does not keep it in stock could easily get it of them. If for any reason your patients cannot get Katarno of the druggists they should address The Katarno Company, Columbus, Ohio.

Peruna, Manalin and Lacupin manufactured by the Peruna Company, Columbus, Ohio. Sold at all drug stores.

SPECIAL NOTICE:—Many persons inquire for The Old-time Peruna. They want the Peruna that their Fathers and Mothers used to take. The old Peruna is now called Katarno. If your druggist or dealer does not keep it for sale write the Katarno Company, Columbus, Ohio, and they will tell you all about it.

Filene's Automatic Bargain Basement

Walk through Every Day

Outfitters for Men, Women, Boys and Girls at Bargain Prices

When Goods Are Sold Under the Automatic Plan, It Is Unnecessary to Add That They Are Bargains

We should have had to give up this system long ago, if we had not had bargains.

Instead, month after month, year after year, it has gone on making every first prices bargain prices and increasing the volume of sales.

Only recently over 1300 dresses were sold all at one price, (several lots) with less than a half dozen being automatically reduced. We had 12 days to sell each lot. Do you think regular prices would have sold them that quickly?

An Example of the Automatic Price Reductions

Take these Infants' Dresses (for example) which go on sale tomorrow, November 11, at $1.00.

¶ If they are not sold by November 25 they will be reduced to 75c.

¶ If they are not sold by December 3 they will be reduced to 50c.

¶ If they are not sold by December 10 they will be reduced to 25c.

¶ If they are not sold by December 17 they will be given away.

And so it is with every basement lot. Even a little less than regular prices will not do. The automatic plan makes necessary a good substantial saving.

For if we do not save our customers money on every lot, the chances are it will not sell as quickly as the Automatic plan requires, and we shall have losses to face.

The example of the Infants' Dresses at $1. shows how drastic this system is. We have only one way of avoiding losses That way is through exceptionally low first prices.

——and that first prices are very low a trip through the Automatic Bargain Basement tomorrow will prove.

M'MANIGAL TELLS OF DYNAMITING CRIMES

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 9.—Ortie E. McManigal, the dynamiter who went about the country lugging a satchel full of nitroglycerine, clock-works and fuses with which to blow up non-union work for J. J. McNamara, took the witness stand in the Federal Court to testify for the government against the forty-five officials who through his confession are now on trial for complicity in the dynamite conspiracy.

McManigal was early in the courtroom, dapper and trim. He probably will be on the stand two weeks.

McManigal told the dynamite conspiracy jury how, fearing they would run out and be injured by the dynamite explosion, he locked several persons in a restaurant kitchen, placed a bagful in front of the door set off the dynamite and went back to a room, where he heard the explosion.

Unveil Tablet Where Boston Fire Started

In the presence of some of the men who fought the great Boston fire of 1872, a tablet marking the spot where the flames started was unveiled at Kingston and Summer streets, yesterday. It was the fortieth anniversary of the fire. The tablet was put up by the Bostonian Society Courtenay Guild, secretary of the memorial committee of the society, unveiled the memorial as several hundred spectators cheered.

Among the old firemen who saw the dedication were David L. Adamson, who served on Engine No. 31; Samuel Abbott, how superintendent of the Boston Protective Department; Charles Wiesborn, an active fireman still, as engineer of Engine No. 44, and Warren M. Blood, who was with Engine No. 4 at the great fire. The officials of the Bostonian society present were Granville Norcross, President; Charles F. Read, secretary; Joseph G. Minot and Nelson Whitney.

GUNMEN NOW READY TO MAKE CONFESSION

Rumored Fear of Electric Chair Has Driven Rosenthal Slayers to the Wall.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—Beneath their veneer of confidence in ultimate acquittal a new-born fear and respect for the law is actively at work today in "Gyp the Blood," "Lefty Louie," "Whitey Lewis" and "Dago Frank," on trial before Justice Goff charged with the actual murder of Herman Rosenthal. Pointed rumors followed the four men into court that in terror of the electric chair, they were ready to enter pleas of murder in the second degree.

Judge Wahle refused to let the gunmen's denial that there was any such plan in contemplation. District Attorney Whitman, however, made the significant statement: "I will neither affirm nor deny the story. I cannot talk about it at all."

There have been rumors before that the gunmen were willing to compromise with justice. Long reflective days in the Tombs, coupled with the sensing of Lieutenant Becker's conviction, have given them a new viewpoint on their relation to society. From Becker's success there comes information that all is not going well with these four youths who ever since they began the civilization of the twentieth century.

The crooks are falling out. They are losing their confidence in each other. Each one is fearful that the other will steal a march on him and purchase commission into the ear of Whitman. This is the real reason why they dropped their demand for separate trials and elected to face fate together.

They made the plunge, and five jurors were selected before Justice Goff adjourned the trial until Monday morning. Midway in the jury selecting the twelve who had been trying Conroy for the murder of a lawyer entered the courtroom and the accused murderers of Herman Rosenthal sat serious faced and silent while a verdict of guilty of second degree murder was rendered.

They whispered together after Conroy had been led away, and then once more the rumor spread that negotiations with Whitman had been opened up.

Selectman Sued by Wife.

WORCESTER, Nov. 9.—Mrs. Cruthia A. Bacon has brought suit in Probate Court for separate support from her husband, Alden E. Bacon, one of the selectmen of Leicester, and she attached his property in the sum of $3,000. She alleges cruel and abusive treatment and failure to support.

"CALL ME MISTER," SAYS GOV. WILSON

"President-Elect' Too Awkward; I Would Rather Be Called 'Mr. Wilson.'"

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 9.—Woodrow Wilson looked over his mail today and found that there were seven different ways that people were addressing different ways that people were addressing him. First there was "President-elect Wilson," then "Governor Wilson," also "Dr. Wilson" and "Professor Wilson," for the one-time university connection; then there was "His Excellency Governor Wilson." Last, but best liked of all by him, was plain "Mr. Woodrow Wilson."

"I would rather be called 'Mr. Wilson' than anything else," he said today. "'President-elect' is too awkward a mouthful. I wish my friends would use 'Mister' in addressing me."

"Still Listening."

The editorials that are being printed on the subject of an extra session of Congress are very interesting and important," said President-elect Wilson after he had read the newspapers today. When asked if he would comment on the necessity of an extra session he said:

"No, I am still maintaining a listening policy. I shall continue to read everything and hear everything that is said on any subject that will come before the President after March 4."

The Governor was asked if he proposed to take newspaper clippings and other forms of signs with him on his vacation.

"Not at all," was the reply. "I propose to rest. I shall neither read politics nor discuss politics."

Wants Complete Rest.

The Governor added that he did not intend to be visited by any political advisers.

Not even Mr. McCombs nor Mr. McAdoo will come to see me," he said. "I have asked to be left absolutely alone. If anybody comes he will not see me, that's all."

The Governor was greatly amused at an editorial which said that Lincoln as he had not received a majority of the popular vote in the United States, it was plain the people of the country were not in favor of tariff revision.

SALEM COURTHOUSE, Nov. 9.—When the Ettor-Giovannitti-Caruso trial is resumed Monday afternoon at 1 o'clock it is expected that William M. Wood, president of the American Woolen Company, will be put on the stand by the defence.

Colonel R. Leroy Sweetser, who was in command of the militia in Lawrence strike duty, and Mayor Scanlon of Lawrence, are expected to be among the witnesses for the defence, also

Spirits for Rheumatism

The use of spirits in the treatment of rheumatism has proved an unwise one among the medical profession. When mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly it is said to be an almost infallible cure for rheumatism and backache. Here is the formula: "From your druggist get one ounce of Toris compound (in original sealed package) and one ounce of syrup of Sarsaparilla compound. Take these two ingredients home and put them into a half pint of good whiskey. Shake the bottle and take a tablespoonful before each meal and at bedtime." Results come immediately. If your druggist does not have Toris compound in stock he will get it in a few hours from his wholesale house. Don't be influenced to take some patent medicine instead of this. Insist on having the genuine Toris compound in the original one ounce sealed yellow package.

Dakota Dan Ready for "Last Ditch" Fight

Could Contest Will Left by His "Brother"

By BERT FORD.

Many who have followed the incidents of the Russell will case have wondered why Dakota Dan, the original sentiment from the plains, has devoted so much patience, time and money to the identity fight when the will of the late Senator, Daniel Russell of Melrose does not make it compulsory for the elder son, William C. Russell, to share the estate with his brother, Daniel Blake Russell, who disappeared in 1885 and was thought to have died.

The fact that, in the event of the prior death of William C. Russell, the long lost heir could claim the fortune and contest the validity of any will the elder son might leave, has been overlooked in spite of the great publicity given to the case.

But that is a legal straw that the Dakotan may clutch at should he lose the present proceeding in progress before Master Gilbert A. A. Pevey, in the East Cambridge court.

It is a feature which is to be held as reserve ammunition by counsel for the ranchman. It is a phase that will surely serve as the last ditch stand in the event of defeat.

Dakota Dan has repeatedly asserted that he was in this court conflict not so much for money as to establish his name and family heritage, and "until the crack of doom" as he puts it. Therefore he has waged the battle with tenacity and unwavering zeal in spite of the obstacles raised by the clause in the Senator's last testament which expresses the hope, AND NOT THE DEMAND, that the elder son will divide the property with the missing brother should he return.

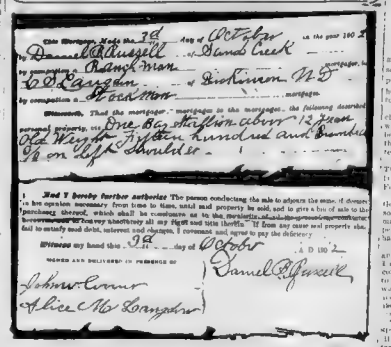
It has been argued by many closely in touch with the remarkable probate tangle that even should Dakota Dan establish his identity to the satisfaction of the courts he would still be at the mercy of his brother William who, with Ferdinand B. Amy, is co-executor of the estate; that the would still be dependent upon William's generosity.

But in the Dakotan's camp a different survey is taken of matters. They contend that if Dakota Dan should succeed in proving himself to be Daniel Blake Russell the real battle would be won. They say the next step then would be an interpretation of the will by the full bench of the Supreme Court.

An adverse analysis would still leave the right to attack the will of William C. Russell should he die before the claim that William C. Russell is older and much frailer than the ranchman who claims to be his brother. Dakota Dan is a man in thousands as to physical power. He has the frame and strength of a professional wrestler.

Attorney Robert B. Nason, of counsel for the will, always alludes to him as the "athlete, the man of amazing grace and strength." He and the others defending the estate against the claims of the ranchman assert that the power and proportions of the claimant are the strongest arguments against his being the runaway son of the wealthy Melrose family. Dakota Dan claims Daniel Blake Russell could bear a birthmark on his left shoulder.

PAPER SHOWING DAKOTA DAN'S SIGNATURE



Old School Sweetheart.

There was a touch of simple romance in the manner in which Miss Keith described the Dakotan's return when she took the witness stand Friday afternoon after Dakota Dan had concluded his forty-three days of testimony, of which he spent forty-two under the lash of Attorney Nason.

"I knew him instantly," testified Miss Keith. "I didn't need any traits or formalization. He looked the same only older and stouter. He hadn't grown much taller. His eyes and smile and speech were just the same, and he had the same shy manner of half turning his head. He parted his hair in exactly the same way. He was always particular about combing his hair."

"He reminded me that I was the only girl he ever loved at school, which was true. He told how we used to walk home together, how he would run over to play in at recess and how he used to sharpen my pencils."

But to return to the matter of a fight over William C. Russell's will, if Dakota Dan doesn't win his case under Senator Russell's will, Dakota Dan expects to outlive the man he claims to be his brother by his will so the other day. That he considers himself more robust was shown in the last bout of his cross-examination when Attorney Nason asked him if he were afraid of William.

"Afraid? What for?" drawled the ranchman. "I guess I could stand up longer than brother Will."

Dakota Dan was fagged mentally and physically when he finished his remarkable siege on the witness stand Friday afternoon. Toward the close he frequently lost his temper and gave vent to outbursts of eloquence and wit.

Attorney Nason wanted to know if he had a dimple in his chin or if William C. had. Dakota Dan explained, "Why don't you have Will's whiskers shaved off and see?"

The hearing will be resumed tomorrow before Master Pevey. It promises to last two months at least, judging from the big muster of witnesses.

Among the interesting exhibits to be offered by Attorney William R. Scharton is a chattel mortgage for $40 which Dakota Dan procured from Charles S. Langdon in Dickinson, N. D., October 2, 1902. This was drawn on a bay stallion owned by Dakota Dan, who paid the loan back next day. The signature of this document is that it bears the signature "Daniel B. Russell" as far back as 1902, which was seven years before he appeared in Melrose to lay claim to the name and fortune of Senator Russell.

TAKE UP FIGHT FOR CUSUMANO PARDON

Lawyer Grady Confident of Freeing Woman Held for Husband's Death.

A fight for a pardon for Mrs. Lena Cusumano will be started this week. She is serving a life sentence at the women's prison at Sherborn for the murder of her husband, Frank Cusumano, at Hull, in October, 1910.

She was sentenced to die in the electric chair at the State Prison at Charlestown, with Bartlo Stasiloff, in June, but a day before the time set for her electrocution Governor Foss commuted her sentence to life imprisonment.

During the coming week her counsel, Attorney Grady and William F. Coughlin, will present their petition to Governor Foss.

With Lawyer Coughlan I shall call on Governor Foss this week and file our reasons for asking a pardon for Lena Cusumano," said Lawyer Grady last night. "A petition to that effect is already in the hands of the Governor.

Mrs. Cusumano is absolutely innocent and we will make our fight on this ground. The Governor's Council, when it voted to commute the sentence of Mrs. Cusumano to life imprisonment, admitted that there was a reasonable doubt of her guilt on account of the additional evidence furnished to them at the hearing held on the case.

"This is on record in the secretary of State's office. When the Governor's Council met there was a consultation with the Secretary of State duly held. On account of additional evidence furnished the council decided the sentence of the jury should be commuted to that of life imprisonment. If there was a reasonable doubt of the guilt of Mrs. Cusumano.

"The law says that in criminal cases where the defendant shall have the benefit of a reasonable doubt. Therefore it would seem the duty of the council to pardon a woman about whose guilt there was a reasonable doubt.

"We have maintained from the start that Lena Cusumano never committed the murder."

Mayor Seeks Worthy Successor to Leahy

Secretary Who Resigned to Devote Time to Proving Soconian Theory.

Any politician who may have had hopes of succeeding Mayor Fitzgerald's secretary, William A. Leahy, who resigned yesterday, will find little consolation in the statement made by the Mayor last night upon the matter.

It will take an exceptionally brilliant man to fill the place of Secretary Leahy, according to the Mayor, and up to date he has no one in mind as his successor.

Some said that either Assistant Secretary Dick Field or Eddie Moore would be advanced to the latter office. The Mayor, however, put a quietus to these rumors when he said that it would be impossible to find men who could do their work as satisfactorily.

The former secretary is a student of letters and will follow literary pursuits henceforth. He is a firm believer that Shakespeare was not the author of the works attributed to him, but that the honor belongs to Bacon. Mr. Leahy hopes to spend much of his time in proving this theory.

A Talk to the Man Who Hides His New Clothes

"A GOOD INDEX of a community," remarked our Men's Man the other day, "is how many men wear their new clothes out of the store.

"You know the old-fashioned kind of man held new clothes in such veneration that he did not wear them except to church or to his own wedding. New clothes had to get frowsy hanging on closet hooks before fit for business. When finally they came out they were suffering from dejection.

"Many a good man's salary stays skimpy because he wears his good clothes on a hanger at home instead of on his back for the boss to see.

"Good clothes pay cash dividends. The better they are (not the higher-priced, mind you, But the better they are both in looks and quality) the larger the dividends. And the man who wears his new suit or overcoat right out of the store into the office of his boss is the chap who will cash in strongest.

"Of course, back of that must be the right kind of a store and the right kind of clothes. Put the old-fashioned sort of 'ready-mades' on the man who is about to ask for an increase in pay and he is likely to wear them looking for a new job.

"Too few men appreciate the value of makeup in the ordinary private affairs of life. By makeup I mean the absolutely right and normal kind of clothes that a man should wear. You know what clothes mean to a player on the stage. They mean even more to the business man, the professional man or the man who would like to be one or the other.

"As I said in the beginning, the real test of that is how many men wear the new clothes out of the store. And I am glad to say it is a growing habit. It speaks well for the new clothes, in the first place, and for the store that sells them.

"That is one of our fundamental ideas here—to clothe a man in such a way that he can step out into Washington Street in the new togs and be just right. We are doing that every day—more of it every day. And we have only got started."

The Men's Man has hit a big nail squarely on the head.

Right clothes pay cash dividends these days.

To hang with hangers! Clothes are made to be worn.

And the right kind of store supplies clothes that can be worn right out of that store straight through—Success Street.

This Seems Almost Like Improving on Perfection

OVER IN GERMANY recently one of our glove experts was looking about seeking what of glove knowledge he might devour, when he came upon an obscure little color artist who turns out to be a real Rubens of glove painting.

THIS little German has been intrusted with some rare treasure of alchemy the secret of which he whispers only to his color vats, the beautiful story of which can be told only by the gloves to which he imparts his wizardry.

After much persuasion we induced him to expand his quaint atelier so that a goodly number of our Securitie gloves might take on the magic of his wonderful colorings—colorings unknown to any other gloves that we have ever seen—colorings so harmless in their ingredients that they wouldn't hurt a baby's ear!

AND so here is another distinctive quality added to Securitie gloves, just when we feared we had reached perfection in their making.

Long ago we exhausted the field of best leathers. Long ago we brought workmanship as near the goal of perfection as human brains and hands could bring it. Long ago we placed the matter of glove style in the keeping of the foremost glove style experts of two continents.

On top of all this we have placed the Filene warranty on these our exclusive products—a warranty that protects you against defects in workmanship and materials—a warranty that of itself must spur us on to produce the best possible gloves.

TODAY we transmit to our public a message that applies just four days of the year—two days in the Spring and two in the Fall.

Tomorrow and Tuesday we shall hold one of our semi-annual sales, when this season's Securitie gloves may be had at a great deal less than regular prices, though these are the very same kinds of gloves to be found here the year round.

Not one pair of gloves is ever purchased especially for these semi-annual events.

We lessen the prices twice yearly simply to make thousands of new glove acquaintances among the women of New England.

Women who know the usual prices of Filene gloves, low as those prices are, see at a glance the substantial savings these semi-annual events entail; those who come to us for the first time soon realize it too.

THERE can be no limit to the selling. Ample provision has been made based upon probable demand. But should demand exceed provision we shall take orders for prompt delivery.

Our usual guarantee on Securitie gloves will apply.

Selling will begin tomorrow (Monday) morning and continue for two days. Especial space has been provided on the first floor.

Rambler gloves—our exclusive brand of lamb gloves—are included at like economies.

This week we shall continue the NOVEMBER SALE OF FURS. The first week brought a very gratifying response. But we had planned so liberally that the assemblage is unbroken.

SEEKING HEARING ON RAILWAY SERVICE

All Concerned Unite in a Demand for Trains Late at Night.

the railroads must be electrified. This will make things practicable that seem impossible now. In the meantime the running of a number of trains after midnight will not cost the railroads any extraordinary expenditure. They have the rolling stock, they have the men, and all other essentials. I have no doubt that they will get the business as soon as the suburban public discovers that going into Boston for an evening no longer raises the grave question of getting home again.

As a real estate man I can say that the development of suburban real estate is greatly handicapped by the fact that people who go ten or fifteen miles into the country to live, get marooned there after a comparatively early hour. Later trains will make such places more accessible and benefit them immeasurably.

The transportation committee of the Boston Chamber of Commerce is alive to the importance of the question, and has already got into communication with the railroad authorities with a view to improving the night service.

The consensus of opinion appears to be that a hearing before the railroad commissioners, who have authority to compel the railroads to furnish transportation facilities, is the best means of dealing with the situation.

RAMSAY TELLS ABOUT SCIENTIFIC MYSTERY

Says Wealth Awaits Man Who Will Find Use for Strange Elements.

of your bright young American students to go to work, with patience and determination, to solve the problem of the identity and properties of those substances. There is a vast fortune, I can tell you, in store for somebody in this one field of research.

Our progress here in America in the field of science has indeed been remarkable. But if I may say so, Americans have been making all along and up to date one great mistake. Many have been doing big things, and in doing so have been wasting and neglecting the small things.

Americans Count Dollars; We Count Pence.

We of Europe, and I speak especially of Great Britain, have been doing the opposite, simply because, perhaps, we were obliged to do the opposite. You, in America, have been counting dollars in your scientific and industrial operations. We on the other side of the Atlantic have been counting pence. I think that comparison will make my idea clear.

And there has been a reason for this. You have not the same incentive for scientific economy as we have. You have everything here in abundance and your operations are so large. But the day is coming, I am convinced, when here in the United States more attention will be paid to checking the waste of the small things while you continue to develop the large.

I am filled with admiration for your educational enterprise and development. Your universities and institutions are organized splendidly, and very practically in a great many ways. But on this head I would like to make one or two observations which may be of interest.

Your students are in the habit of looking after themselves, so to speak, in the most commendable manner. For instance, with us, in our college halls of residence, there is a warden in charge to look after the comforts of the students who occupy them. Here your men require no warden in their hall of residence and, with an admirable self-reliance, they take care of their own comforts and college life.

But there the balance of admiration comes to an end. With your college men, in their actual study work you have too much "spoon feeding"—I wonder if that good old English phrase will express my meaning here! I think it will. You have too much "spoon feeding" in your education—too much is done for the student to help him at his work.

It would be far better to let the student find his own way more—to fit for himself, so to speak. The results in his after life would be far more encouraging.

I give you credit for all your fine self-reliance which I have noticed in the daily lives of your students. I have seen it wherever I have gone in the United States. But there is not the amount of research per head as we have in Europe. But this, I feel, will come in time.

Your American manufacturing chemist is a splendid worker. He is earnest and industrious and he is making steady strong attacks on the German manufacturing chemist, displacing him in many instances. It is absurd for your men to beg so large-

Guard Well Your National Resources.

Every nation must take more care of its natural possessions. In our own case in England, it is now agreed upon by men of science that in 250 years the coal supply of Great Britain will be exhausted.

What will come after coal it is impossible to foresee, of course. But science will fill the need as she has never failed to do in the world's history.

From things scientific and matters of research, it is rather a long jump to ask Sir William Ramsay for his views as to social affairs in his own country. But I made the jump and my distinguished expert responded in the most courteous way. But as he spoke his manner was filled with gravity, if not with sadness.

"I cannot say," he said, "that I am optimistic as to the future of England as we may judge them by present conditions. We are now passing through a period of political and social upheaval which is filled with ly of the manufacturing chemists of Germany when you can produce yourselves here such first-rate products.

The evil can be made just now as to your over-concentration on large affairs and your neglect of small things applies to your industrial life as well as to your scientific.

Take your roads for instance. Americans have been pursuing an almost penny-wise and pound-foolish policy in the matter of roads. Nothing in the way of produces more waste of energy or leads to greater loss of time, causes more profanity and ruins the nerves of a nation more than bad roads.

I am glad to see that you have begun and are carrying forward a large reform in that direction. I have noticed in the papers, with feelings of deep pleasure, the appropriations which your public bodies and your State Legislatures are making for the building of good roads.

The proposed construction of a great national ocean-to-ocean highway, by the combined resources of Congress, the different States and private enterprise, I look upon as a noble idea. I trust the project will be carried to completion as speedily as may be.

All these reforms, paying attention to the small things and watching the great wastes and the development of your roads are proofs that the American people have at last begun to realize the vital importance of the conservation of the nation's resources.

Roosevelt brought this idea to the front and for doing so he deserves full credit. In his messages as President and in his writings, he kept steadily before the minds of the American people the tremendous importance of conservation. For preaching this doctrine, he is entitled to praise.

the gravest consequences to all the interests of Great Britain.

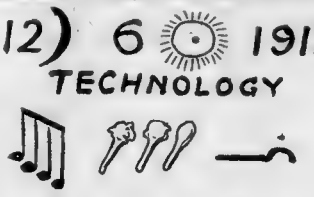
So great has been the disturbance caused by present policies that capital has actually begun to leave the country, and no man can tell what is to be the end of it all. Lloyd George is preaching a great crusade for a new order, and he has already carried into law acts of Parliament which are half simply socialistic or paternal, but are actually confiscatory.

I can compare Lloyd George in his political methods a good deal with Joseph Rowntree. Both are sincere, patriotic men. But their methods are not evolution, they are simply sholl too.

Lloyd George and his colleagues have practically abolished our House of Lords and we are drifting toward government through a single chamber. Your election Tuesday showed that the American electorate is a great deal more sound than ours. For this you have to thank your constitution. We have no constitution written constitution I mean, but if we had I rapidly coming I am convinced when we in Britain must fight for a written constitution which will enable us to stem the tide of socialism that is rising all about us.

The conditions as they are today are already producing deplorable results. The values of property are seriously unsettled and are rapidly deteriorating. Let me give you one proof of what I mean: I am negotiating for the purchase of an estate on the Thames. I am not in a great hurry to acquire it. Yet so anxious is the owner to sell that the price of that estate has in a few years come down one-third. The owner knows that I can afford to wait, and things are so unsettled that he fears a still further depreciation. Of course, it is very well to talk about reforming the House of Lords, our upper chamber. But those who undertook that task went a great deal further than reform. They reached the point of abolition. What the future of the country is to be as the result of this is a problem of serious concern.

Tech's Sign Language 'Ad' for Annual Concert---Easy Reading



TECH MUSICAL CLUB'S ANNOUNCEMENT.

TECH ADVERTISES IN SIGN LANGUAGE

Booms the Coming Club Concert by Real Up-to-Date Methods.

Tech students are nothing if not up-to-date. So they've gobbled up the latest linguistic kink—"sign language"—and written a big ad on the bulletin board at Tech Union.

The ad appeared yesterday. It was in "sign" characters. It looked so puzzling that it stumped the clearest-brained solvers at Tech. Soon a crowd had gathered in front of the bulletin board. After hours of study, here's what the "sign" experts made of the sign writing on the wall:

December 6, 1912, the Technology Musical Clubs will have their concert. People will go to get the music and the men will bring ladies. The music is followed by dancing.

The students weren't sure about the last sign. It might have been meant for a turkey eating a tree or it might simply have been a terpsichorean figure to stand for plain dancing.

ARREST SIX IN RAID.

Charge Lottery Was Conducted at No. 146 Summer Street.

Five men and one woman were arrested yesterday as a result of a raid by the police of the City Hall avenue station at No. 146 Summer street. Furnishings in the office were seized by the police. The raid was the result of complaints made to the police that a "lottery" had been conducted in which chances were bought on a suit of clothing each week. Those arrested were Max Mertick and Max Sass of the South End, both charged with possessing lottery; William Bimon, Charles E. Smith, Ignatz Linder and Mrs. Katie Sass, who were charged with being present where gaming implements were found.

WEDDED AT CATHEDRAL.

Miss Whitcomb and Mr. Dodge Married at St. Paul's.

Miss Eleanor Edith Whitcomb, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Whitcomb of Farrington avenue, Allston, and Carl W. Dodge of Allston, were married at St. Paul's Cathedral yesterday afternoon by Dean F. S. Rousmaniere. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a traveling gown of blue cloth with a black hat. Only the immediate families and a few friends attended. Mr. and Mrs. Dodge will live on Gardner street, Allston.

J. F. DUFFY MAY RUN.

Friends Want Him to Try for School Board.

John F. Duffy, president of the Matapan Improvement Association and a prominent criminal lawyer, will be a candidate for the Boston School Board if the wishes of his friends prevail. Duffy is secretary of the Ward 24 Democratic committee and undoubtedly will have the support of that organization if he consents to enter the contest. He is a graduate of Boston College, Harvard Law School and a member of the executive committee of the United Improvement Association.

RECOUNT TOMORROW.

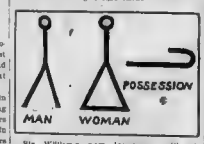
Ballots in 23, 24 nad 26 for State Offices to Be Inspected.

A recount of the votes cast in Wards 23, 24 and 26 of Boston on the vote cast for State Treasurer, Auditor, Attorney-General and the Representatives will begin in Faneuil Hall tomorrow. The recount on the vote for Sheriff will not be held, as William McDonald, the defeated candidate, failed to appear with the necessary number of signatures asking for the recount. He was defeated by 44,000 votes.

Believe In Signs? Can You Use Them?

Sir William Ramsay, one of the world's foremost scientists, is working out a universal language employing signs instead of written words.

For instance, instead of writing the words "man," "woman" and "possession," he would have signs like these:



Sir William's new language will attract universal attention when he has completed his chart of characters.

How would you, readers of the AMERICAN, if you were left in a strange land where your language was unknown, and where the language of the inhabitants was not understood by you, express this sentence in Ramsayite Written Signs:

"I am hot and hungry. Where can I find food and shelter?"

For the five best replies the AMERICAN will pay One Dollar Each.

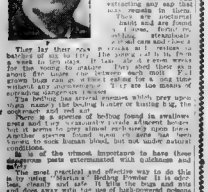
A Few Facts About Bedbugs



Their lay their eggs in the crevices of bedsteads, and the young are hatched in a week to ten days. It takes about five weeks for the young to mature. They shed their skin about five times between hatching and full grown from ranging at first eating for a long time without any nourishment. They are too lifelike to withstand the ordinary measures which prey upon insects, including bedbugs. Bedbugs belong to the order of bugs and are found in all parts of the world. Bedbugs are known to have a certain fondness for human blood and are found in all parts of the world. Bedbugs are known to have a certain fondness for human blood and are found in all parts of the world. Bedbugs are known to have a certain fondness for human blood and are found in all parts of the world.

There is a species of bedbug found in swallows' nests and they occasionally invade adjacent houses, but it seems to prefer human blood when it can get it. Another species found upon rhinoceros hides has been known to suck human blood, but has never attacked man.

One of the utmost importance to have these dangerous pests exterminated with Lichtheim and Co.!

The most practical and effective way to do this is by using "Martin's" Bedbug Powder. It is odorless, cleanly and safe. WE WANT

TO GIVE FREE TO EVERY THIN MAN AND WOMAN READER OF THIS PAPER

A 50c BOX OF SARGOL, THE FLESH BUILDER

Don't be a Mere Shadow of your true self. Let Sargol make you a Picture of Health and plump.

We invite every man and woman reader of this paper, who is thin, pale, weak or run down, or who has lost his or her buoyant, youthful energy, or who suffers from loss of appetite, or from debility, either nervous or physical, to try ABSOLUTELY FREE a new scientifically compounded preparation called Sargol.

The trouble with most people who appear like "a bag of bones" is not that they don't get enough to eat, but that they do not assimilate what they do eat. They simply go through the natural motions of eating, but get no flesh-building part of what they eat and pass away without being assimilated and consequently does not do them any good.

Sargol helps digest your food and aids in its assimilation. There is no need for you to be a "skinny," and go around with that pinched, hungry, half-fed look any longer. Sargol will make you plump, alert and as "fit as a fiddle."

For the man who is dubbed "a bundle of clothes" and who is out one of all the good times because he's so thin, "can't get a girl," who has to round out the angles of his figure with pads and artificial forms, and is then painfully conscious of the fact that even with the forms and pads she isn't fooling anybody, Sargol will prove a blessing.

If you have never used the marvellous flesh-producing preparation and you are really in earnest and want to try it at our expense, here is your chance to take advantage of our most generous offer.

Simply cut off the coupon below, fill it out with your name and address, plainly written, and enclose 10c in silver to help pay the cost of mailing, etc., and send it to the Sargol Co., 223-Y, Herald Bldg., Binghamton, N. Y., and we will not only send you a 50c package of Sargol absolutely free, but will also send, at the same time, letters telling what it has done for others, and literature telling all about Sargol, the greatest flesh-producing preparation science has ever known. Cut out the coupon and send it today.

FREE COUPON

Sargol Company, 223-Y, Herald Bldg., Binghamton, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—

I have never used Sargol and I want you to prove to me that Sargol will build me up and make me fat, as you say it will. I enclose 10c in silver to help pay the cost of mailing me a 50c package, which I am to receive absolutely free. Fill in coupon to your letter.

'PEDIGREE THE PASSWORD TO INNER SANCTUM OF BOSTON SOCIETY'

'BOSTON RAISES TOO MANY FAMILY TREES AND NOT ENOUGH APPLE TREES,' SAYS WOMAN LEADER OF BACK BAY CIRCLE IN ANALYZING SMART SET

Mrs. G— Says Deified Family Tree of Boston Is "a Flourishing Industry."

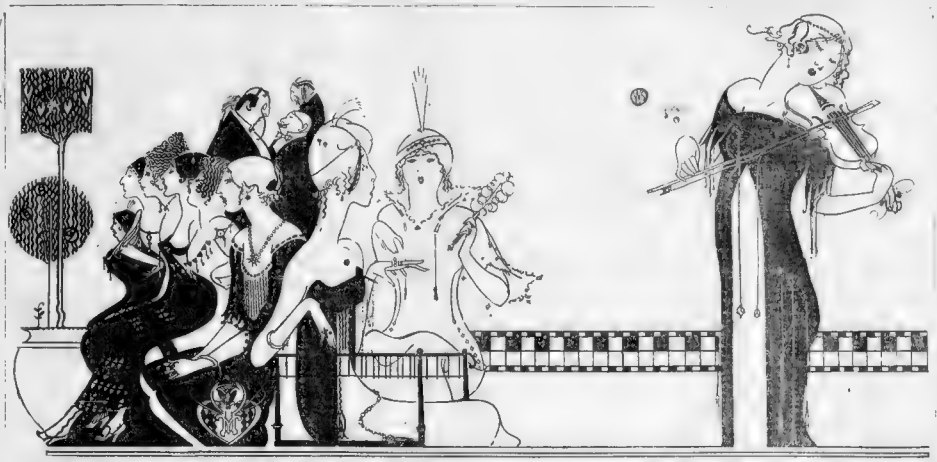
Tells Some Incidents of Back Bay Life She Has Witnessed.

A BOSTON society woman has written for the Sunday AMERICAN the following article, in which she dissects Boston society.

She was moved to write this article by Arnold Bennett's characterization, "The Inscrutable, the Unknowable Back Bay."

This society leader, whose family tree is supplied with progenitors to the satisfaction of the arbiters of Who shall be recognized as Who, who is properly vouched for by the Blue Book, and whose name is familiar to the people of Boston who read the newspapers—and who does not!—must remain nameless in this instance, however.

If you have your suspicions as to who may have written the article, you are welcome to them—but at this writing we may only announce that the article was written by "Mrs. G——"



A young woman had just performed rather cleverly upon the violin. "Why, who is that?" asked a very handsome young woman. "She is Mrs. B——," was the reply. "I do not know her maiden name, but——" "Not know her maiden name—not know her people—why, my dear, are you mad?" And before the evening was over an appointment had been made by a self-constituted committee to meet and dissect the ancestry of the married woman and pass on her the life or death sentence, so far as social ostracism in that part of Boston was concerned.—From Mrs. G——'s article.

BY MRS. G——

Editor Boston American

Dear Sir—It was with a rare poor 3 journalistic discernment that Arnold Bennett after a few days casual visiting in Boston, set himself down and wrote this effusion THE INSCRUTABLE, THE UNKNOWABLE BACK BAY!"

Had he lived in Boston—or, perhaps, I should say within the city limits of Boston—for let us say a quarter of a century, he still, so far as the Brahmin blooded are concerned, would be able to write in the same expressive way, but instead of satisfying himself with a simple exclamation point he would utilize this black type that has become the intermediary between the super-heated editor and his audience.

When I first ventured into the holy precincts of Beacon street on the one side and the Charles River on the other I carried with me in an abysmal ignorance the idea that respectability, a concrete religious belief and enough money to purchase a new gown now and then were all that would be required to permit me to become a recipient of New England hospitality augmented by the polish that would naturally come from association with residents of the Athens of America.

TOO FEW APPLE TREES. TOO MANY FAMILY TREES.

Not distinguished cause, not swiftly but surely, tantalizingly. My power of analysis in those days was not so keen as it is now or I should have properly classified myself and worked out a system that might have been beneficial to me, or if not to me, to others.

I care never made an attempt to figure on how some of the aristocracy enjoined residents of Goshen, the erect member of Boston's elite. Rather, have I given some attention to diagnostication of the cause, the result of the pulse feeling and tongue showing be lack decided of the Back Bay three parts even as a flag was split up:

FIRST, PEDIGREE PLUS WEALTH.
SECOND, PEDIGREE PLUS "A LITTLE MONEY."
THIRD, THE FRINGE.

William Allen White, who probably could not get any nearer the heart of the Back Bay than he is now, at Emporia, Kansas, made himself famous by writing this justly famous editorial:

WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH KANSAS?

The matter with Kansas is that she raises too much hell and doesn't raise enough corn.

If I were in the least inclined to be sparklingly epigrammatic I might take, apropos of "pedigree" in the list of requirements quoted, that Boston raises too many family trees and not enough apple trees.

Pedigree Is Password to Inner Circle.

If some enterprising people-thinner were to cut down the sacred codfish from the gleaming dome of the State House he might be forgiven by an at first indignant populace but were he to chop down the deified family tree he would be sent to the electric chair, safe from reach of the most lenient governor or compassionate executive council.

The family tree of Boston—not only a fixed institution but it is a flourishing industry. With carefully pictured horticultural skill the seed is planted, the sprout is watered, the sapling scraped and the young tree tended with loving hand.

How the little twigs are bent so that we will incline to the right direction!

Sometimes [illegible] necessary to do a little GRAFTING but when this operation is required it is accomplished with such license that it leaves no mark.

Pedigree at Boston's password to the sanctum [illegible] society.

And, it might be said by way of enlightenment, that the minimum number of a pedigree is [illegible] length. Does not make any particular difference about the various strata of the soil that it has to come through so long as the roots are deep enough.

One may have pedigree, but the tree and bedded about it the pulverized bark from the fragrant tan yard and moistened it with rain and dew, as it were, if the tanbark and rain are the proper date!

Woe Betide the Sudden Rich Aspirants.

But woe betide the [illegible] who attempts to grow a pedigree nurtured with oil from the earth or fat from the packing house or to prop it with kegs from the glowing Pittsburg belt and the Alleghanies.

[illegible] better for him or her to be a one-horse shallow life or [illegible] and step off the middle of the Harvard bridge.

I don't vary well when Mrs. H—— opens the door of Beacon street [illegible] and [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] beautiful doors [illegible] outbreak [illegible] the outer defenses of [illegible] St. Peter. She [illegible] and [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] the first step with [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] on the fringe. I [illegible] short [illegible] painful breath of wonder and fear.

She lives a house on Beacon street a perfectly good, proper, [illegible] properly [illegible] horse. Having [illegible] she was [illegible] that, [illegible] this was to be a game in which to play would be wasted. Then the second step.

She employed a butler. He was a snob, but [illegible] the way [illegible] with quiet, an unmistakable taste.

Then began her real sortie. I [illegible] in attending the best [illegible] affairs that could be broken into. One of two hours' ride with her [illegible] that with dilligence and patience you might hope to step in an invite.

But the [illegible] house on Beacon street availed nothing. [illegible] [illegible] with [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] was able [illegible] that, but, after a time [illegible] [illegible] where money as [illegible] of its real worth.

[illegible] and Dr. Holmes were did everything. From writing [illegible] [illegible] street to [illegible] [illegible] a medal of character, and [illegible] [illegible] was not a place. "Mind a state of mind."

A young woman who had [illegible] [illegible] two or three times [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] about [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] tude of Bostonians [illegible]

"I know what I've been [illegible] with a touch of [illegible] [illegible] What Dr. Holmes has [illegible] Boston is not a place, but a state of mind."

She replied the much [illegible] woman [illegible] [illegible] I wonder a little.

"Not [illegible], certainly," snapped the Boston woman.

The next [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of the storm that passed through [illegible] Back Bay when a [illegible] thought enough [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to evolve a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] ment that it was [illegible] [illegible] which, as a matter of fact [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] separate [illegible] [illegible]

M'CALL OPPOSED TO FORTIFYING CANAL

"Safer Without Forts," Says the Congressman at Twentieth Century Club.

Congressman Samuel W. McCall, speaking before the Twentieth Century Club yesterday, declared that according to his view the Panama Canal would be safer without forts.

"All nations should share in the benefit that come from the canal," said Congressman McCall. "In case of war each nation should place a protectorate over the canal. This would prevent it being confiscated as war spoils. Should this country fortify the canal it would be the theatre of war in case of a clash between this and another country."

S. A. Thompson, secretary-treasurer of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, advocated waterway improvement.

"I am convinced," he said, "that some railway men are near-sighted on the wonderful business that will follow in the development of waterways. The way I figure this thing out is that these railway magnates would make money by reason of increased business. The thinking railway men understands this and knows that waterway and railway business must work hand in hand sooner or later."

Charles Morris Addison, rector of St. John's Church, Stamford, Ct., who is the children's grandfather.

Miss Curtis Will Fight for School Place

Spinster Aunt to 4,700 Children, She Says

Society Woman Sure She's as Well Qualified for Post as a Mother.

Miss Frances G. Curtis, the wealthy Boston society woman, who is a candidate for a place on the Boston School Committee, declared yesterday that as spinster aunt to 4,700 children in her charity work, she was just as well qualified for the position as though she were the mother of children.

This experience, together with that obtained in helping to raise eight brothers and sisters, Miss Curtis averred, fitted her for the school committee as well as a suggested woman candidate who has children, but is said to require a governess to take care of them.

Miss Curtis Ready to Fight.

Miss Curtis did not name the woman candidate likely to oppose her, but it is known that the School Voters' League are opposed to Miss Curtis, because she is not married, but is listed as a candidate Mrs. Susan W. Fitzgerald.

Backed by the nomination of the Public School Association, and indorsed by the Citizens' Municipal League, Miss Curtis said she would fight for the place on the committee if it became necessary. Even at her Summer home at Manchester-by-the-Sea, Miss Curtis said:

I certainly shall fight for the position on the School Board if the situation demands it. But it was not come to it yet. The School Voters' League has merely fallen out on the table. I don't quite understand what that means, but I know it does not mean the matter has been entirely dropped.

I am not going to show fight until the proper time comes. Then I shall have something to say. I hope that everything can be harmonious through. I have the nomination of the Public School Association and the indorsement of the Citizens' Municipal League. They have some weight, you know.

The School Voters' League has until Monday night to name a candidate. They certainly won't let it go by default. They will do something Sunday or Monday and by then the thing will have to come to a head.

Woman Demanded on Board.

There is a general demand that a woman should run for the School Board. Of course I realize that the Jews of the city ought to have some representation. Still, I think I know something of the needs of the Jewish Jews. In my charity work I have visited hundreds of tenements in the Jewish sections of the city. I have visited the homes of people of nearly every nationality I think, perhaps, that I am as well qualified to serve on the School Board from what I know of the needs of the people as any other woman, even though she may be a mother.

The claim that there should be a candidate "qualified by experience and practical understanding of the school situation, a woman who would directly represent the point of view of the mothers," is somewhat amusing. I fancy I know the women whom they are considering. I have nothing against her personally. Still, I think that I, the spinster aunt to 4,700 children, ought to know just about as much about the needs of children and the methods as a woman who may have children of her own, but who is reported to have to employ a governess to take care of them for her.

I helped to bring up eight brothers and sisters, and I feel that I know something of what is demanded of a mother.

What Miss Curtis Would Do.

The qualification that the Public School Association wanted in its woman candidate is judgment that can be placed side by side with that of the men members of the board. In my years of work on the State Board of Charity I have got along very well with the male members, and I think that to be entrusted with the care of the school wards is somewhat of an honor in itself.

"What would do the first thing were you to be elected to the school board?" Miss Curtis was asked.

"The first thing I would do would be to learn my job and act with just as much judgment as I used in all other cases," she answered.

Miss Curtis has just returned from a trip to La. Kier in her charity work when she was found at her fine summer home at Manchester-by-the-Sea. She declights to remain on the North Shore until late in the autumn.

And Miss Curtis, even though she may be busier than most women, finds her charitable work does not interfere with her social duties in the least.

"I guess she wears out as many dresses as any other woman in the social swim," remarked a friend as she came into the library to get Miss Curtis to play tennis.

Miss Curtis laughed. "I guess I do," she said.

Miss Curtis goes into the tenement houses of the North End, she ministers to the needs of the poor in the West End, and visits mill towns of the whole State.

And she has several little sleeves of her own, who are with her at the Manchester home. They came in, bright, rosy cheeked little girls, as their aunt was telling of her plans for her school committee fight. They put their arms about her affectionately.

MISS FRANCES G. CURTIS.

"I fancy I know the woman whom they are considering, I think that I ought to know just as much about the needs of children and mothers as a woman who may have children of her own, but is reported to have to employ a governess."

One Hundred Lessons Offered by the AMERICAN for Next to Nothing.

One of the most interesting of the Boston bank which caters particularly to women is about a woman who said to the cashier:

Yes, madam" said the cashier "how much do you wish to deposit to open the account?

"Why, I haven't any money" said the "female of the species." I want an account so I can draw checks and get money.

If the woman is short on the essentials of business knowledge as she was then she can acquire a commercial course now for only 68 cents.

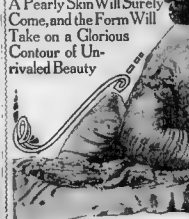
A Trio of Beauty Secrets That Made Valeska Suratt Famous

Graciously Revealed By Valeska Suratt, the World's Most Famous Self-Made Beauty

Wrinkles Will Surely Go, A Pearly Skin Will Surely Come, and the Form Will Take on a Glorious Contour of Unrivaled Beauty



SAY what you will, there are three things which are the very basis of beauty. Without these three you may as well make up your mind that all your efforts in other directions will almost surely fail.

Even these three things must be done in a certain manner and with certain treatments, otherwise though you will be doing the right things, you will not be doing those things right. In other words, you will be on the right church, but on the wrong pew.

The following three things constitute the very essence of my success. Then everything else in the line of beauty culture became marvelously easy. I had something to build up on. Every woman will have to do the same thing if serious work is desired. Sleeping won't do it. But you can do it in spite of late suppers, late hours and the omission of heavy, bothersome exercise.

This trio consists of, first, complete relaxation; second, mental poise, and third, a perfect circulation. Let us start with a room that is the antithesis of noise. Next, the development of the form and the bust to beautiful lines of contour and luxurious fulness.

There are other things, of course, besides these three, but I mention them as absolutely basic right at the start. Begin on these now. Follow the instructions which I give you below and I can assure you that you will marvel at the change in yourself when you look in the mirror in a few short weeks thereafter.

The treatment I give you is absolutely different from anything I have ever before heard of, and I have for a long time been importuned by my friends to reveal the secret to them. I did so to those whom I thought would follow my instructions, and invariably the result has been glorious.

—yes, beyond their expectations. Then the results upon myself were, I will say, truly marvelous. No other word will express it.

I want each one of you to begin today by using the following facial cream. Its mineral and vitalizing properties are such that it will soon find that all the creases you have been powdering by using are cast in the shade. I myself used it

Apply this cream every morning with the tips of the fingers, after washing your face with very warm water and soap. Use very liberally around the eyes, on the forehead, on either side of the nose, everywhere where you see fit to apply the face in your fingers, pinch it and roll it for a few minutes until the cream disappears. Then apply your complexion powder. This will mean the end of wrinkles. The cream will not grow hair.

I want to give you now my secret for the development of the bust. Many women believe it cannot be done. Well it certainly cannot by any ordinary treatment. Massaging, pinching, rubbing and the like will only result in making the bust flabby and shapeless. Some of these treatments, too, are positively dangerous. Others are simply a waste of time. Here is the secret. Get from your druggist two ounces of pure spirits of camphor. Pour this into a bowl of hot water and add a teaspoonful of powdered borax. Then add a little bay rum, about a teaspoonful, and a little witch hazel. Now, with the hands, dash this mixture up and down over the bust. Do this for about fifty times.

Now for the ointment I will reveal what I stated last Sunday for the benefit of others.

In a large bowl pour one-half pint of boiling water. To this add four tablespoonfuls of glycerine. Place this bowl in a pan of water on a slow fire. In a few minutes add two ounces of spirit and continue stirring until all is dissolved. At first it will look like jelly, when it will start to cream. When it does this, remove it from the fire and stir constantly until cold. Then keep it in an air-tight jar. You should be able to get about as any good drug store and it should not cost you more than fifty cents. This will last quite a while.

YOUNG ASTRONOMERS REAL STAR GAZERS

Dorchester Grammar School Pupils Solving Heavenly Mysteries; "Where Is Mars?"

Twinkle, twinkle, little star,
How I wonder what you are!
Up above the world so high,
Like a diamond in the sky.

Dorchester grammar school children are not only repeating this opening stanza of a poem that older people will recall from their First Reader days, but they are actually studying the stars under college text instructors.

It is started as a class activity to introduce the study of astronomy in the grammar schools, and the experiment is proving successful in more than one way, and to some degree. The idea was due to Alfred T. Underwood of the Arnold Arboretum, and Miss Ann A. Manning, a teacher in the Dorchester schools. The astronomical school room is Franklin Park.

Clear Mysteries of Heavens.

Many of the mysteries of the heavens were cleared away for the youthful astronomers on Friday night. Boys and girls, alert now wide-eyed, gazed at the objects and big globe in the circle of lit by candles in a darkened room at the stars.

The instructor is red familiarity, and in a surprisingly short all the little boys and girls understand. Miss Manning assisted in the by moving among the students, keeping the them in order and helping them identify the stars when they were called on to do so.

One little fellow of an inquisitive turn also led to have his astronomical heart set on one of the planets.

"Where is Mars?" he kept asking.

He wondered at first did not feel the the instructor's fellow's persistent and he finally brought an answer.

Mars is in the instructor, "will not be seen again in this part of the world for a few months."

The fellow exclaimed in youngster and his interest for the moment was gone.

Telescope Next Time.

Perhaps for more immediate enjoyment and the Martian adherent until the announcement came they would have a telescope to look through at the next session.

If they are telescopes, the class expects will soon see the rings of Saturn. This I must be shading brighter than ever dusted and the moon's craters.

The eyes of the little group had become so accustomed to distinguishing the heavens that they could catch the faintest stars unassisted. It was a common to point out the constellations when difficulty was encountered.

"I expect," said Dr. Gunderson, "that you have to use a in the constellations, with the help of the alphabet. and a of small dots—the number, the by the Greek letters of the alphabet. I was delighted when the voices of the little ones around the names I gave from a paper copy of mine."

Those Difficult Names.

Of little my had taken a great liking to Pegasus. He knew where the constellation was and was always ready to point it out promptly.

What is that constellation? Dr. Gunderson would ask.

It stood a while but from the box a Lyra, a name of any other in the class. And with the screen off the first night in the class fellow was corrected. "It wasn't!"

He had to admit he came back promptly and triumphantly:

"It was! It was! the only star visible in the Box!" Both was another one that proved a stumbling block for the adult. Cassiopeia was too much for them to pronounce and they had to call it the W-shaped in order to identify it at once.

The sharp angles of the constellation of Cassiopeia and the brightness of how stars made it very easy to find all else. So I did to have an Egyptian name, so they called it just plain "the Cross."

Upon the screen, fixed a star in the North sky to represent the North Star. Then they knew where to look when they wished to see in the sky. Also they learned to see in the sky. Also they learned to see in the sky. Also they learned

David I. Walsh Gets Big Welcome in His Native Town of Leominster

"I Am the People's Servant," Says Bay State's Next Lieutenant-Governor

Foss' Running Mate Declares No Man Should Be Retained in Office Who Opposes Will of Voters.

THE HONORABLE DAVID I. WALSH.

DAVID I. WALSH 4

T. R. folks who came up to Leominster from Clinton last night declared that the Leominster demonstration in favor of David I. Walsh was "some show all right," but they said other things that will come to boost it all it was hardly up to expected to celebrate Wales celebration of two months before.

The truth is that the Leominster Concert bands was so loud and stirring that one could hardly make out just what these several citizens saw were saying.

Men and women of Leominster who had come down to cheer on Doorsday to get a few points from the Clinton burrah, and go it two or three better—said that the Clinton demonstration had been "all right in its way," and a credit to a town of only 24,000 people, but of course not to be compared with a community of 20,000 souls which, moreover, was the birthplace of the Lieutenant-Governor-elect.

And so they differed somewhat in nonessentials, last night in Leominster but they were ONE on the Big Issue.

And the Band Played.

"Here he comes!"
"Hoo-ray!"
"Hil David!"
"O, you, David!"
"Three cheers for David I. Walsh!"
"Hip, hip hooray! Hooray! Hooray!"

And the cheers were lifted to the sky, and the bands played "Hail to the Chief" and the "Conquering Hero" and "Yankee Doodle" and the "Star Spangled Banner," and "Dixie," and all the other tunes that make you feel like hip-hip-hooraying, and marching and singing up late, and declaring that this is the best country, and this the best State, and this the best little town, in all outdoors.

And there was speech-making in the Town Hall; and representative citizens talked about the Lieutenant-Governor as a little like, and as a small boy and the like of that, and then declared that everybody had seen in the Old Days the foundation of that splendid character which, developed by life and the world, has given us the David I. Walsh of today.

All of which was decidedly inspiring to the Sunday AMERICAN reporter who had traveled out to Leominster for a hooky interview with the first Democrat ever elected to the Governorship of Massachusetts, the Lieutenant-Governor-elect, and may be for a long time, a great hoped for, if issues as the expenditure of money in primaries and elections the initiative the referendum and the recall, and, in a word, the "rule of the people."

Walsh Born in Leominster.

Mr. Walsh was born in Leominster forty years ago tomorrow. He was the second youngest in a family of ten children. When he was still a little shaver the family removed to Clinton. His father died when David was a boy of twelve.

Old-timers in Clinton remember that they bought their evening newspaper from David Walsh when David was a high school boy. Mr. Walsh remembers some of these old "customers" of his, too, and he likes to meet them. And in Clinton they will tell you how the Walsh girls threw work five of them—upside many ascendless in order that David might go from Clinton High to Holy Cross College at Worcester, where, for many days each of the newspapers a special holiday was declared on Wednesday in honor of Mr. Walsh's success.

Mr. Walsh was graduated from Clinton High in 1898, president of his class and one of the class orators. He was graduated from Holy Cross in 1903, having made the four-year course in three years. Again he was one of the orators, and in view of what the Lieutenant-Governor-elect chose to talk about in his Sunday AMERICAN interview it Leominster last night it is decided of interest to recall that the subject of the Holy Cross College address, nineteen years ago, was "The Citizen Patriot."

He had been at work in every college vacation and he had some little money laid by, but there was not enough for the course in the law school. So he worked in the Clinton water department for a year before entering Boston University. He left the B. U. Law school in 1907, again with two of the three class honors. Once more he was president of his class and one of its orators.

How busy he was even since that day may be read in the records of the courts for Worcester County. His law partner is his younger brother, Thomas, a major on the staff of Governor Foss. "Dave" and "Tom" look so very much alike that acquaintances have some difficulty in telling which is which, but as a matter of fact one of them is ever so much handsomer than the other.

Clinton people see nothing remarkable in the fact that David Walsh has never married. He is "only forty," they remind you, and he has "never had time," and besides he is the ideal lover of every one of the sisters, who loved him and believed in him when he was their little brother. He makes his home with his sisters, their mother having gone to her reward in 1906.

For all the excitement, Mr. Walsh was glad to state his position on some of the questions now uppermost before the people of the country. These are some of the things he said to an interviewer from the Sunday AMERICAN.

Scores Huge Campaign Funds.

The basic reform needed in all States today is the elimination of abnormally large campaign funds, now used to control party caucuses and sway popular elections.

Complete rule of the people can never obtain so long as any one candidate is permitted to squander a fortune to secure possession of a primary.

A purified ballot, which shall insure to the humblest citizen consideration equal to that given the multi-millionaire aspirant for office, is essential before other issues can be determined on their merits.

The selection of suitable men to be voted upon on election day is of the utmost importance. Thousands of right-thinking citizens now are kept out of law. This law should be repealed and a more liberal measure substituted in its place upon the statute books.

A man cannot be true to his oath of office if governed by the fear of what his friends might think. Neither must his actions be determined solely by his own personal likes or dislikes. The supreme test should be, What do the people want?

The question is not what I think about the law, but what the people demand. No one is fit to serve his fellow men unless he is willing to be guided by their wishes.

In electing a man to public office, the citizens of any given community merely hire him to do certain work. The right to employ carries with it the ethical right to discharge.

A law for the recall of representatives should be enacted that the people may exercise their moral right to remove office-holding employes whenever the occasion requires it.

To deny the people the right of the initiative and the referendum is equivalent to saying that they are not fit to govern themselves.

The interests of the community are best served by limiting the power of an office holder to that of a servant, and preventing him from acquiring the rights of a master over those he is hired to serve.

The every-day citizen of Massachusetts should be empowered by statute law to determine who shall represent him in the United States Senate without the intervention of political bosses or party leaders.

Readjust Taxation Laws.

There should be an early and a complete readjustment of our laws on taxation—a readjustment that will make impossible the continuance of existing evils.

The burdens of taxation the State now today press too heavily upon the shoulders of the poor.

It would be a sad commentary on our boasted civilization if our high schools and colleges benefited only the comparatively few young men and women educated thereby.

The true purpose of higher education is not to enable one to amass unlimited wealth.

A college training merely fits one to help uplift one's less fortunate fellows, whose opportunity for self-advancement necessarily is more limited.

High family prestige and influential friends in Massachusetts today, are not absolutely essential prerequisites to a man's election to important public office.

To me it is inconceivable how a college-bred man can hold out against progressive legislation. It is like expecting a stream to rise higher than its source to ask the people as a whole to modify their situation political under existing conditions.

Our State primary law, with its pernicious party enrollment, gives to the bosses almost complete control of our elections.

There is no direct way in which the citizens can compel, absolutely, men holding executive positions to enact into law the measures demanded by their constituents.

The whim of some office-holding master of greater moment than the wants of our servant people, who of a right should be the real masters.

Through the interposition of obstructive technicalities, men in every way entitled to hold office are placed in positions of tremendous responsibility.

Even in the selection of others to represent their views in the United States Senate, the men to be represented are denied a voice and a vote on the question.

And, back of it all, there is the swollen campaign fund evil, where candidates of vast means virtually are able to buy almost any kind of nomination they desire by hiring an unlimited number of men to work in their interests.

"But, Mr. Walsh, does not your own election disprove this contention?" he was asked. "Have you not already said that you had a hard fight to secure a renomination next year if some man with a million were to oppose me at the primaries how about the thousands of others who are defeated solely by the use of abnormally large campaign funds?

We have passed stringent laws prohibiting the purchase of votes, to protect the interests of the poor man and insure honest elections.

But we still permit the unlimited expenditure of money in hiring paid workers at the primaries, sending out personal campaign literature and secured speakers.

The poor man, however deserving he may be personally, today is compelled to fight for his nomination against overwhelming odds.

But we can't how to have an absolutely pure [illegible] in politics so long as some have to be to campaign expenses.

It is wrong in principle to allow any candidate, before the primaries or preceding the election itself, literally to swamp a perhaps more worthy candidate by a money-mad campaign.

To all practical purposes the result is the same as if votes actually were purchased, when a man of almost unlimited means secure office in this way.

Men, not money, should rule here. The purpose often is true under the present campaign-fund regime.

No, I don't see anything unusual in the idea of a Lieutenant-Governor, even, declaring that he should not be guided wholly by his own likes or dislikes.

A farmer's hired man takes his orders from the farmer; the employe of a street railway obeys the rules of the company, a department store clerk takes his orders from those who employ him, in every instance, if he wishes to retain his position.

The hired man doesn't point somewhere when the farmer orders him to sow wheat, or if he does, he can't hide behind the "I know what is good for you better than you do yourself" plea.

Neither will you find the street railway employe running on a schedule known only to the state corporation commission, or the soda clerk at the ladies' bar counter.

Why then, should a Lieutenant-Governor or any other public official, a temporary chief executive, occupy an office where the people who pay his salary may not direct his every act?

If the story-day employe has the right to dictate [illegible] in the proper discharge of his duties, it is a right he ought not to have to dispute.

The man to be a leader of a free people, who is taking advantage of red tape reverence for the popular election of a United States Senator, ought to be fired as quickly as the hired man who planted cucumbers instead of sowing wheat.

To sell rubber boots over a ladies' hat counter is no more absurdly concrete in orders than to oppose the wishes of the citizen employer.

No man is big enough, intellectual enough, to be given power over men against their wishes.

ANDOVER DOWNS EXETER, 7-0, BY BRILLIANT FORWARD PASS IN FIERCE GRIDIRON STRUGGLE

Buckle Takes a Perfect Throw From Murray and Runs 30 Yards for Only Score of Game at Andover—Mass Plays Fail Against Both Lines and Drop Kicks Miss the Goal Bars

ANDOVER, Nov. 9.—In a fiercely contested game Andover won her eighth successive victory yesterday afternoon. The score was 7 to 0. A beautiful forward pass, executed with accurate precision, brought victory to the blue-clad warriors.

It was Buckle, Andover's fleet little end, who received the pass from Murray and dashed thirty yards for a touchdown. The play came on the second period. Twice Andover had failed to penetrate the Exeter defense.

Throughout, Coach Ryan had unable to make any headway against the stubborn Exeter defense. Time after time Ryan ordered a forward pass. While Murray dropped behind the line, as if to punt, Buckle ran downfield far up the field. Straight as a die Murray hurled the pigskin towards Buckle, who nestling it in his arms ran unscathed till he had placed the ball between the goal posts. Wiley kicked the goal.

"Straight Football" Failed.

It was the only successful forward pass pulled off by either team throughout the afternoon. Exeter, on four attempts to advance the ball by this method, always failed miserably.

Neither team seemed able to advance the ball by straight football. Exeter made first down by rushing once or twice, while Andover twice made distance.

Buckle and Mars, the Andover ends who were supposed to be of inferior ability, covered themselves with glory. Both were down the field like a shot on punts and nailed the Exeter runner in his tracks.

The game was played on a soft muddy field, which made the footing difficult. Neither eleven had an offence that was powerful enough to overcome the strength on the Exeter line. Both were down the field with their punts. Lomas broke through his opponent in the second quarter, blocking a kick.

Both Thomas and Eads who succeeded him at quarter for Andover ran the team with flawless judgment. Thompson particularly showed great ability at handling the ball.

Bingham played a clever game behind the line for Exeter. Twice he punted the ball for Exeter after an Andover player had fumbled.

Exeter was penalized twice, a total of fifteen yards, once for holding in the line and once for offside play.

Exeter won the toss and decided to receive the kickoff. The wind was very slight and therefore made the advantage resulting from the winning of the kick-off very slight.

Quigley's Fumble Costly.

Wiley, Andover's center, remained with the ball at the beginning of the game. Quigley, the Exeter fullback, received the ball on Exeter's forward line, but with the entire Exeter team on interference carried it fifteen yards to Exeter's forward line.

A deep punt sent up from the Exeter 40-yard line, however, when Quigley on the very next play fumbled the ball, which was recovered by an alert Andover player who covered the ball on Exeter's 35-yard line. But Exeter's defense was of the stonewall variety.

After Gould, the Andover captain, had failed to gain around Exeter's left end, Lomas was given the ball for a plunge through the line, but Lomas nailed him without a gain.

Then Wiley tried a long kick from the Exeter 40-yard line, but the ball went to Burt, who gathered up the pigskin on the 10-yard line and returned it to the 25-yard line, which was recovered by Mars.

Again it was Exeter's ball, and by a series of line bucks Exeter managed to penetrate Andover's defense to the 40-yard line. Then Wiley standing on Exeter's twenty-yard line made another attempt to boot the pigskin between the goal posts, but it went far to one side.

The ball was brought back and was placed in Exeter's possession on the twenty-yard line. Only once did Exeter get through center. Then Quigley dashed around end, carrying the ball forty-five yards.

to Andover's forty-five-yard line. It was the longest punt of the game. And Gould, running like a deer nailed Mooney in his tracks.

Wiley punted to Quigley on Exeter's twenty-yard line. Exeter tried an end run, but was penalized for holding. Then Quigley kicked from Exeter a ten-yard line to the fifty-yard line. Mooney, who secured the ball, running it back ten yards.

Nelson then tried to gain around Exeter's right end, but was thrown back for a 10-yard loss. Nielson punted to Kelly on Exeter's 20-yard line. Again the Andover ends were down the field like shots and threw the Exeter captain to his track on the Exeter 20-yard line.

Exeter Penalized Fifteen Yards.

Kelly then broke through the Andover line for an 8-yard gain, but the advantage was lost on the very next play, when Exeter was penalized 15 yards for holding.

Exeter was then forced to kick. But the Exeter line failed to properly protect Quigley, and his kick was so hurried that it carried but a short distance. The ball was secured by Andover on Exeter's 30-yard line. Twice Andover failed to gain through the Exeter forwards. On the third attempt Nielson wriggled through right guard for three yards, but Andover was penalized five yards for holding. Nielson went through for five yards, and Exeter was penalized five for being off side.

Andover then made its third attempt to score from a place kick. It was Wiley again who dropped back for the kick. This time the Exeter forwards, sifting through, blocked the kick, which was recovered by Bingham on Exeter's forty-eight yard line.

Kelly gained two yards through left tackle. Quigley, with splendid interference, tore around Andover's right end for a twenty-yard advance. But in the next two scrimmage plays Andover defence again stiffened, held Exeter for short gains, and then resorted to the pass, but twice this play failed, and Exeter was forced to kick.

Quigley kicked to Nielson who secured the ball on Andover's fifteen-yard line, running it back ten yards to the Andover fifteen yard line.

Exeter Tried Forward Pass.

Mooney gained seven yards around right end. Gould failed to gain in the next play and Nelson punted to Quigley at midfield. After two attempts to gain through Andover's line had failed, Exeter tried the forward pass again, and it failed as had every attempt by Exeter to use this play.

Andover then secured the ball on down. Nielson immediately kicked a long spiral. The ball was brought out to nine at Exeter's twenty-yard line. Quigley punted to Andover's thirty-yard line, Nelson carrying it back to the forty-five yard line. Murray made twelve yards around Exeter's right end, but dropped the ball when tackled, which was recovered by Bingham.

Andover held Exeter for three downs. Then Quigley punted to Mooney who returned the ball 15 yards to the 50-yard line. Gould delayed pass, Gould punted 30 yards

Andover was held twice without gain Perceiving that the efforts to gain through the Exeter line had proved futile, Thompson, the Andover quarter, signaled for a forward pass. Murray dropped back and tossed the ball into the outstretched arms of Buckle who carried the ball over the Exeter line for the only touchdown of the game. Wiley kicked the goal

In the second half, Quigley kicked off to Murray, who returned the ball back to Andover's 25-yard line. Murray made eight yards through the Exeter line but Andover was penalized 15 yards for holding.

Waite Makes Long Run.

Nelson got a low punt off to Quigley in the corner of the field. Exeter was unable to gain and punted to Andover's 40-yard line. Murray got four yards on an end play. Ward made a forward pass to Exeter's 35-yard line. On the next play, Waite punted to Andover's 40 yard line. Murray and Gault got two yards and on the next play Murray added four more. Nielson punted to Waite, who returned the ball five yards to Exeter's 45-yard line.

On a fake kick Waite got fifteen yards around Andover's left end. Kelly failed to gain around Andover's right end. Exeter tried a forward pass but it was incomplete Waite punted outside on Andover's 20-yard line.

On the next play Exeter was penalized fifteen yards for being offside. Murray got two yards through right tackle. A quarterback run netted no gain Waite punted and Waite returned the ball five yards to Andover's thirty-five-yard line. Another forward pass by Exeter was knocked by Andover.

Eadie intercepted a forward pass on Andover's twenty-yard line. Murray plugged through the line for eight yards. The ball was on Exeter's forty-yard line at the end of the game.

With every precinct accounted for, the returns show that the Carlisle's had gathered [illegible] points to the Army's six. Early in the first quarter Mr Powell was noted industriously engaged in an effort to scalp a tuxedo coat with which he [illegible] by the government at this time, and Mr. Powell was pursued to the side lines by a troop of indignant cavalry officers [illegible] fight.

The Indians were heavily penalized for Mr. Powell's offence, being given one-half the distance to their foes' goal. As Mr. Powell [illegible] his [illegible] staff on the Army's 40-yard line this penalty was of much value to West Point Then Hobbs made a couple of great end runs.

Hobbs Scores a Touchdown.

Following these same end runs, the same Hobbs found a small hole near Thorpe, through which he eased for a touchdown, constituting the Army's only score. The dereliction of Messrs. Thorpe and Arcasa is unexplained even now.

It is absolutely necessary, under the rules in a report of a Carlisle game, to mention something about all the poor Indian, so here it comes, in the second period. Lo, a poor Indian named Thorpe made a fair catch of a poor punt by Hobbs on the Army's 40-yard line. We now become technical. Mr. Thorpe bunted around Mr. Hobbs to the Army's 15-yard line

Two other pays failed to gain anything to speak of.

Mr. Thorpe Bad Indian.

The Messrs. Thorpe and Arcasa executed a notable forward pass in west forward quite a ways and Mr. Thorpe personally conducted a small dive through centre for a touchdown. He also kicked the goal

On the kickoff for second half, Captain Devore of the Army found Mr. Upon of Carlisle wandering around in the woods far from the lines of formation and far from the ropes. It was a temptation which no well regulated army officer could resist.

Captain Devore seized upon the Indian and gently escorted the ball from tree when the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals interposed and saved the redskin. Captain Devore was quietly expunged from the game

A crowd of the Army rose [illegible] something of exterminating a few Indians early in the game, but Devore stopped him As Meyers kicked out Thorpe got the ball, fumbled and recovered and then leaped nimbly towards the entire Army team. He passed through forty-five yards of Army territory, going by whole squadrons and companies of soldiers and disregarding their challenges. He went across the touchdown but the officials would not allow it. The reason is unknown for he was wanted to make the game really hard for the Indians.

Yale Triumphs Over Brown Flynn Injured, but Continues

the 35 and 45-yard lines and one drop kick at the 15-yard line.

At no time did Yale have the ball inside of the Brown 40-yard line during the half Brown's execution of the forward pass was perfect. Yale used a cross-skill play many times.

The star of the game was Flynn of Yale, who made many long runs around the ends. After being knocked senseless in the fourth period, he insisted on continuing in the game.

After forcing play through the first half and missing all chances to score on Yale, Brown weakened in the second, and the Elis accumulated a touchdown, an inch-and goal in the third period, and in the closing seconds of the final period registered a goal from the drop-kick route.

"Lefty" Flynn, starring in every department of play, dashed 40 yards for a run that placed Yale in position for the first touchdown, himself took the ball over the line after a desperate fight under the shadow of the visitors' goal and kicked a goal after the touchdown.

Seizing the ball 25 yards from the Brown goal on a fumble, Yale rushed to within three yards of the line in the last minute of play, held till third down and Pumpelly lifted the ball over the crossbar for the score that made Yale's total 10 and left Brown scoreless.

Brown Uses Forward Pass.

Brown came on the line of the forward pass and employed it a dozen times for gains. Only once was the play of service to Yale, when it gained 20 yards and brought the ball to the Brownies 25-yard line on the occasion of the attack that resulted in the field goal.

The Brown assault for chances to score after the ball had been carried inside the Yale 40-yard line in the first half, turned aside all the opportunities offered although the Brown forward passing game had taken the ball from the visitors' 30-yard line to the Yale 25-yard line in the last half minute of play and a score seemed inevitable against the Elis substitution aggregation which had been cast upon the gridiron after Yale's score had mounted to ten points.

Standing high above the shoulders of his fellow players of both sleeves in quality of play as in his plural physical stature, Maurice Bennett Flynn of the Bronx, "Lefty" Flynn to his comrades, pulled Yale from the defensive into an attacking position right under the guns of the forts of the Brown enemy.

It was Brown's wonderful end runs that created opportunities in succession for Gill Eli and after Yale's assault at the threshold of the Brown goal seemed sure to fail it was Flynn who hooked the ball and ripped a hole through the stubborn Brown defence for a score.

Was Star of Game.

Flynn gained more yards than all the other members of the Yale eleven combined, and outpunted Hemingway, his able and reliable and most brilliant Brown kicker.

Next to Flynn, Phillin's ground gaining, Ketcham a whirlwind centre play and the dashing open field work of the Yale tackles, Tu bot and Warren, shone

For Brown, little Crowther, quarterback, runner of the plays, goal catcher and lightning dodger in a broken field, covered himself with glory. Captain Davies Yale tacklers for dogged gains, and sending his eleven catapulting on the double quick, till it even outplayed its best, the blonde quarter was the room of a crowd of 20,000 people hostile Yale foes as well as ecstatic Brown friends

Ashbaugh Played Well.

Next Captain Ashbaugh was in the thickest of the clash, pulling down for ard passes that seemed impossible and defensively driving back the most [illegible] strike of the Yale gripe.

The change of sides in the second period brought Brown the advantage of a high wind and Brown took advantage of another poor pass to Flynn, following the kickoff to nab the ball at the Eli's forty-yard line.

Henry's magnificent try for a quick goal from placement from Yale's forty-five-yard line [illegible] was really [illegible] against [illegible] upward scoring. The ball went outside the upright bars.

Flynn, punting against the wind, kicked high and out of bounds at Yale's forty-yard line and Ashbaugh tried a place goal which was blocked. Been picking up the ball and rushing to the Yale thirty yard line before he was brought down.

Brown seemed in another position to negotiate a score, but Heavy a forward pass was nipped by Spaulding and Flynn pulled him temporarily out of a hole by a thirty-five-yard end plunge, but a short punt gave Brown the ball on its own fifty-yard line, and the Brown attack gained for the first time, the backs alternating in twenty-yard advances, where it was checked till third down.

Ashbaugh's Kick Blocked.

The fortune of war favored Brown in the failure of the next attempt at quick placement goal. Ashbaugh's try was blocked by Flynn, but Crowther picked up the ball at the Brown forty-five-yard line and dashed back ten yards, invading Yale territory.

Although Brown exhibited its first forward pass at this stage, it gained only five yards, but the place try fooled Crowther touching the pass, although he picked up the ball and dashed ahead ten yards. It was Yale's ball on down.

Refused to Leave Game.

The play brought Flynn and Ashbaugh into collision in a rough tackle and for the count.

After several minutes, he had his way with his captain who ordered him from the field. He stuck to his post and the next Brown attack found Captain Ashbaugh stretched senseless. It was the Brown captain's turn to take the limit allowed for exhaustion, but like Flynn, he refused to quit ad dogpully finish the curtain fell on the most desperately Yale-Brown game ever fought.

Severe injuries there were none, however, and the two down substitutes were for exhaustion or pains Brown with the advantage of the wind in its first half was always forcefully [illegible] by the same heroes, in the second, cashed the ball on a forward pass, the first period closing scoreless with the ball in Yale's possession in midfield.

Brown's display of splendid forward passes, following Flynn's punt to centre, carried the ball from midfield to the Yale fifteen-yard line. The pass was varied, as two payers working a successive y and Yale was unable to intercept the Crowther to Ashbaugh combination lasted twenty yards, and a Henry to Crowther combination gave twenty more. Crowther's try for drop kick sent the ball into the Yale rush line just before the first half closed

Marblehead Is Victor.

MARBLEHEAD, Nov. 9.—Marblehead defeated Danvers High this afternoon in a one-sided game at Seaside Park, by a score of 17 to 0. O'Brien featured in three end runs for fifteen yards each. Martin drop-kicked a goal from the 25 yard line.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 9.—With one minute remaining to play and the score 21 to 20, in Michigan's favor, Dick Marshall took a kick from Thesen of Michigan's 40-yard line and dropped it over the Wolverine team and won the greatest gridiron play played on Franklin Field, this afternoon, the score being Penn. 27, Michigan 21.

The light Red and Blue eleven had been whipped, ripped asunder by Coach Yost's team, but their plucky fighting spirit never dimmed. The first half ended with the count 21 to 0 against them. Then Penn started, like the juggernaut of old, Mercer smashed across for a touchdown, after a great team fight up the field, a slow mark, first down after first down.

Sensational Uphill Fight.

Lon Jourdet snatched a forward pass from the skies and escaped the clutches of Boalnell, the Michigan quarterback, who had tackled and the Red and Blue had another touchdown. The fourth period came on, and Penn fought up the field, only to have its chance blighted a dozen times through penalties but she never stopped.

Yost was changing a player every second. Tarks' Harrington bore the brunt of battle again. He smashed, wrecked and demolished that Michigan line. Mercer dodged it to death with his end runs and little Dick Marshall killed it with his long flights.

Then Mercer gave one dart-like run of 30 yards, Jourdet took a forward pass to Michigan's 20-yard line. Harrington battered along, chalk mark at a time. Mercer dealt the line another jolt, and Penn got its third touchdown. Chester Minds missed the goal, a difficult one, and the Wolverines had the lead still, with the score 21 to 20.

Once more Pennsylvania, desperate, game and scarcely sobered, began to batter along. Four minutes remained to play Gradually Pennsylvania fought to Michigan's thirty-yard line. Then came a fifteen-yard penalty. Minds fumbled on the next play and Mercer wound up things by slipping and then in trying to circle back and regain his loss, he was tossed to the earth for a seventeen-yard loss.

March to a Touchdown.

The team fought at midfield for a three minute stretch. Then came the last stand There was less than a minute to play Thrice Pennsylvania held Michigan, and strange to say, Johnnie Craig, who beat Yale's line so wonderfully and run last season, in the last three minutes, carried the ball, every time of the last three.

Jourdet got him on the fourth time for a two-yard loss. Captain Thomson then dropped back for the kick which was to send the ball lilting into deep Penn territory, and save the game. Jourdet and Young tried to block the kick. They buried themselves through the air at Thomson. Marshall, small of stature, stood 35 yards from the Michigan goal line. The oval whirled towards him. He caught it and started. Chalk marks dashed under his feet like the railroad ties under the Colonial Express.

He dodged Pontius, outraced Torbet made Barton, the other Wolverine and [illegible] him.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Nov. 9.— Williams defeated Wesleyan in an exciting game on Weston Field this afternoon by the score of 10-7. Weather conditions were unfavorable, including rain, hail and snow, but the frequent fumbling only added to the interest in the contest.

Williams obtained a lead in the first period and won the game by a field goal in the last quarter. Wesleyan came back with splendid fighting spirit and forced a touchdown during the last two minutes of play.

Williams was easily the stronger team of the two, but in the department of forward passing the Purple was forced to yield the palm to the visitors.

The exhibition by Coach Daly's men in this, the most critical contest of the season, was on the whole satisfactory. Never before did the Purple lines show such defensive ability; and never before was the plunging so successfully executed against a worthy foe.

Consistency in the attack, for which the Williams eleven has been striving for many weeks, was to some extent achieved today, at least to a much larger extent than on any previous occasion.

Lewis repeated his performance of last week at Ithaca and, by outplaying Bacon, who was by no means outclassed, placed himself in a position to be favorably considered for All-American quarterback.

Turner, Vinal and Michael also deserve mention for their powerful exhibition on both offense and defense. Kenan and Rush excelled for the Red and Back. The former eluded Turner as a amateur and the latter was an all-important factor in the success of the Wesleyan forward passes

When they began executing forward passes, plugging up holes in their line and doing a little line piercing themselves the Pennsylvania lads did the Trinity aggregation anxious and nervous to the point of inevitable fumbling

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 9.—Cornell was vanquished by Dartmouth's weight and speed in the last local game of the season here today, 24 to 0. The local team was no match for the New Hampshire men although they played them to a standstill in the second and fourth periods. Dartmouth's heavy line and strong clinging tactics scored two touchdowns in the first quarter which took the Cornell players off their feet.

The local men then took a brace and held well through the game and made frequent gains on forward passes. Dartmouth was penalized heavily for offside play and holding, while Cornell's work was scrawled considering that Captain Butler, Fritz and Erich, three of the best men, were out of the game because of injuries

Dartmouth started off with a rush and scored three touchdowns before the first half was far advanced. An exchange of punts opened the game, then Morey and Snow worked the ends for 25 yards on Cornell's 25 yard line. The Cornell line here crumpled like paper under the weight of the Green plungers. Whitney, Snow and Morey each made a few yards on line plays and soon had the ball on the one-foot line, from where Whitney went over, breaking through the Cornell right guard and tackle. Engleborn kicked the goal.

Had Walk Away.

Hill kicked off to Morey on the 33 yard line, and then there was an other walk-away. The Dartmouth players plunged through the Cornell line for large gains. Cornell recovered the ball, and O'Connor was forced to punt. Dartmouth got the ball on the Cornell 46-yard line. Snow and Llewellyn each made 11 yards, and other line plunges brought the ball again to the Cornell one-foot line. Snow went through left guard for the touchdown. Engleborn kicked the goal. Th Green rushed the ball to the Cornell 15-yard line, where Barnds and Hall added a goal from field, but failed. The quarter ended with the ball in possession of Cornell on Cornell had better in the second quarter and Dartmouth was forced to punt several times. Cornell also had the ball on it first down on the 25-yard line, but forward pass was tried which failed and Dartmouth got the ball on the 20-yard line. The was the nearest Cornell came to scoring during the first half of the game. Snow again went around forward passes to which game Cornell resorted more exclusively during the second period. Several failed, however, when they went wild. Dartmouth used line plunging without success, and then got the ball on a series of lightning forward passes. The Dartmouth players were to say for passes and allowed O'Con... who he went through left end and for nine yards a touchdown. Cornell was nearing the Dartmouth goal when the second quarter ended. Score: Dartmouth 24; Cornell, 0

Cornell's Ball.

The two teams see-sawed again in the third period. The ball was Cornell's most of the first half of the period and in Dartmouth's possession. Then it went back and forth continually to get out of danger from the Cornell and the middle of the field. The Green finally worked the ball to the 5-yard line on Dartmouth's 15 yard line of which both sides were penalized and got back. A forward pass McCullough to Loudon, caught the ball behind the goal line. Snow kicked out to Whitney and Engleborn kicked the goal

O'Connor, who was running the Cornell team, was substituted for Trainer. He got a punt and was downed on Cornell's 35-yard line. Dartmouth held Cornell for the end of third period, Dartmouth, 24; Cornell, 0

Holds Up Pass.

Whitney intercepted one of Trainer's forward passes shortly after the fourth period began and ran to the Cornell 30 yard line. Curtis soon broke through outside of Cornell's left tackle and ran to the 15-yard line, where he was downed by Trainer The Cornell line held here and Snow was forced out of bounds on an attempted for ward pass for a 5-yard loss. Engleborn then fell back for a goal from placement on the 18-yard line and placed the ball over the bar. Score: Dartmouth 27; Cornell, 0

Both sides made frequent substitutions in the line as the men were becoming tired out. Talbot intercepted a forward pass on Cornell's 18-yard line and failed to gain when time was called

Score—Dartmouth, 27; Cornell, 0

GREAT YALE COLISEUM WILL SEAT 60,000 PEOPLE

PLANS HAVE ALREADY BEEN DRAWN UP FOR BUILDING OF MAMMOTH ATHLETIC STRUCTURE

New Athletic Field at New Haven Will Have Provisions for Football, Baseball, Track, Tennis and Other Sports

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 9.—Plans were laid before the Yale Alumni and Athletic Association this afternoon of the mammoth stadium to be built for the Yale students. The plans will be shown to the Alumni that will visit this city for the Yale-Princeton and also the Yale-Harvard games that are to be played here in the course of the next few weeks.

It is proposed to give these privileges to those who subscribe for the building fund of the new athletic field. The plans show that the total cost will come to $700,000.

The most interesting and notable feature of the great playground for the men is to be the coliseum of concrete to seat sixty thousand persons. This is planned so that it may be extended to seat one hundred thousand persons if desired. The size of these will cost $500,000.

In addition to the coliseum there are to be erected combined track and baseball fields to cost $150,000 and a clubhouse to cost $100,000. The new Yale Field is to run from Derby Avenue from Hillhouse Avenue to the present college fence. It will be necessary, however, to remove the boat house now standing there, twenty-five feet below the present level, to remove the loam from the territory to be covered by the field and stands then to grade the land. RIGHT ADJUSTMENT OF CARBURETOR A MONEY SAVER

It Is, However, Inadvisable for Tyro to Monkey With This Delicate Portion of a Combustion Machine

By J. C. KERRISON.

With the expected increase in the cost of gasoline, the motor user will be forced to investigate to a greater degree than heretofore the various means of saving expenses. Naturally enough, his first attention is towards securing increased mileage out of a gallon of gas, which eventually means in a year's driving, of, say, approximately 5,000 miles, considerable saving in dollars and cents.

During the early stages of the motor car the average driver paid considerable attention to his carburetor; in fact, it was generally considered that if there was anything the matter with the car the trouble could be traced entirely to the device. But as the years advanced and progress in motor construction was made, the carburetor manufacturers made proportionate advances, so that today carburetor difficulties are, comparatively speaking, among the least of the troubles.

The manufacturers have applied to their individual cars carburetors which experience has taught them will give very good maximum efficiency, and in most cases they will, but atmospherical conditions often times create a disturbance in the conditions of even the most learned and expectered of engineers, so that today a car will carburate to perfection and tomorrow or sometime there may be a slight disturbance. Then again, the carburetor adjustment for Boston will not possess the proper mixture to give efficient service in other sections of the country.

Commercial gasoline has changed considerably. It has become heavier than in years gone by, and the heavier it gets the more air it requires to effect complete combustion, and cars which a few years ago could and did average twelve to fourteen miles to the gallon of fuel to-day, and a few months in so high an average under present conditions.

It is possible, however to so alter the adjustment of the carburetor as to secure a great increase in mileage out of a gallon. For instance a car which today is doing twelve miles to the gallon of gas, the elevation of the mixture increased but a trifle without in the slightest decree altering or impairing the efficiency of the motor over the entire range of engine speed.

No carburetor is made so that it can be set at any one point and left there for any length of time. Indeed, it is necessary to change some or other as there is always a tendency to defeat the object for which the carburetor was designed, that is to give the most power with the least gasoline. Usually the simplest way is to send the carburetor in to the factory where the greatest efficiency at the various speeds. This is rather a delicate operation and before that should not be attempted by the average owner or driver

MOTOR INDUSTRY IN ITS INFANCY

It Is Estimated That Grand Total in 1913 Will Be Nearly $1,000,000,000.

Put it down as an axiom of the imagination to say that the automobile business will eventually exceed the entire business of the railroads of the United States, said F. A. Scheerer, a prominent factor of the Goodrich Tire and Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio, in an address delivered at the recent meeting of the association of Goodrich dealers held at that business city.

The American automobile must be considered as just beginning. The present business has already reached a total of astronomical proportions, when we recall how developed in this country the good roads, comparable to the continental roads of Europe, and we shall have taken advantage of them by connecting towns, villages and cities with automobile travel carrying the traffic under a speed like as the railroads are now doing—when we shall handle all the traffic on the streets with the commercial car and the product of the former as trains moved to the city by the same means all of which is bound to come—then it is no stretch of the imagination to say that the automobile business will exceed the entire business of the railroads of the United States.

"It is estimated that the grand total of automobile and its allied accessories in this country will be in 1913 nearly one thousand millions of dollars—several times the business of the Pennsylvania railroad. This will give you an echo of quick results of the automobile industry in the last decade.

"Now, the question that comes to us is this: How will we get our share of this business? All the advertising we can do will not help the dealer in this matter unless he has the service to back up the assurance he gives. Without the dealer's effort to give service and satisfaction to the purchaser, the factory's effort to create business will be largely wasted. The dealer's success depends upon the success of the man farther up on the line, the distributor and on the factory. The success of the factory depends upon the success of the dealer. It is essential to both that the service which they have undertaken to render to the purchaser of their product be satisfactorily performed."

BIG YEAR FOR TRUCKS.

Fred K. Perke Says Demand Will Be Greater Than Supply.

[illegible] Motor Truck Co. [illegible] returned to Detroit after a tour of inspection of the New England branches. Mr. Perke said: "The business for 1913 promises to be the greatest in the history of the motor truck industry. It is essential to the manufacturer, jobber and dealer that they get their orders in early, as we are now booking orders for spring delivery. Many of the factories are coming to a point where they will be unable to fill orders for immediate delivery. Those who are in the market for trucks should place their orders at once."

WILL HAVE A NEW HOME IN THIS CITY

White Co. Makes Contract for Large Building on Commonwealth Avenue.

A large real estate deal, which will result in the spring in a splendid new building on Commonwealth avenue for the White Company, it is said, has just been closed by the company with Albert Seeger, Jr. The transfer involves the sale to Mr. Seeger of the corner building on Berkeley and Harvard streets, now occupied by the company as a salesroom and service station, and the purchase by the company of a plot of land on Commonwealth avenue, the latter site, there will be erected as the Boston home of White cars one of the largest and best equipped sales and service stations in the city. The mere fact that the salesroom is one will measure 80 by 94 feet is sufficient to indicate the magnitude of the whole undertaking. With the other parts in proportion the site on will undoubtedly be as adequate and complete as any in the United States.

In the land transaction just consummated Stephen A. Peirce of the old South building was the broker. The plans for the new building are being prepared by Clarence J. Warren, who was the architect for the White company when it erected its garage at 319 Berkeley street. TEN YEARS MORE AND YOUR WIFE WILL VOTE; BAY STATE IN LINE, SAY SUFFRAGISTS

THE backbone of the opposition to woman's suffrage in this country is broken, in the belief of the leading suffragists in Massachusetts.

The old Bay State will swing into line within ten years, they declare. Then—Ah, then look out! If you want to be Governor or Mayor or Representative or anything like that you'll have to coddle the ladies.

The victories for suffrage in four additional States last Tuesday have made happy the champions of that cause. The new States to be admitted to the circle are Arizona, Kansas, Michigan and Oregon. The ten States which now have accepted women suffrage have seventy electoral votes.

Sure It's Coming Soon Here.

Mrs. Thomas P. Curtis, an ardent suffragist of the Back Bay, believes that in about ten years Massachusetts will join the equal suffrage States.

The editor of the Woman's Journal, Miss Alice Stone Blackwell, is very enthusiastic over the recent results. She maintains Massachusetts cannot much longer hold aloof.

Miss Eugenia Frothingham, lecturer on "Votes for Women," takes great satisfaction in the results of recent elections. She will not predict exactly when Massachusetts will elect a Governor by the votes of women, but thinks the time is nearer than ever.

Mrs. Marion B. Kelley, chairman of the board of directors of the Equal Suffrage Association of Boston, is hopeful the Bay State may "come to its senses" even in four years.

Others are just as hopeful and say the backbone of the opposition to equal suffrage has been partly broken and that we should look for radical changes in the next four years. Here are their views in detail:

MISS EUGENIA FROTHINGHAM, niece of Bishop Brooks, well known lecturer in behalf of equal suffrage:

No one can tell when women will have the ballot in Massachusetts to elect a Governor. It seems, however, to be nearer than ever before. All the great movements in this State have taken time and much patience. So many things that Massachusetts stood for! There was child labor, for instance, in which we took a decided stand at first, and influenced other States.

People are awakening to the subject. Nothing is more talked about than equal suffrage. Of course, there is the "stiff neckedness" in Massachusetts, which it is hard to overcome. By this I mean nothing can be suddenly accepted by the State that has not been thoroughly threshed over, but when found expedient, then comes the final action.

I really do not like to be in the prophetic class, but I believe that Massachusetts before long will get more interested in this subject, and then will dawn the equal suffrage millenium.

MRS. W. D. HUTCHINS, Secretary of the Equal Suffrage Association, Boston:

No one can tell the exact time when equal suffrage is coming to the Old Bay State. It is coming, however, and the general feeling toward it is better than ever before. I have great faith in the men of Massachusetts. They are perceptibly coming to take a more liberal view of the opportunities of women in civic and national relations as factors of influence.

When it does come, and when we are doing our part as women to elect the Governor of this State, then the wonder will be why the change did not come sooner.

MRS. THOMAS P. CURTIS, one of the staunchest champions of the cause:

Just as soon as Massachusetts gets over being so conservative about the rights and privileges of women, just so soon she will swing into line with the other ten States for woman's suffrage.

Intelligence will finally prevail in this State along the lines of equal suffrage. It may be ten years, or it may be less, but everything indicates that the day is not far distant when women will do their part in electing a Governor of Massachusetts. You must remember that it was early in the nineteenth century that the workingmen here received his right to vote. Times change and we change with them.

MISS ALICE STONE BLACKWELL, Editor of the Woman's Journal:

The result of last Tuesday's election surpasses all our expectations, and here we are, not a night to be unusually happy! Massachusetts will now put on its thinking cap, and it may be ten years from now that we shall see equal suffrage here.

People generally in the State are beginning to a snowedge that equal suffrage is coming to Massachusetts, because it breaks down women's minds. It leads to improved laws, it raises the character of candidates, it brings women increased respect. It brings about fuller companionship between husband and wife, it promotes temperance, it would increase the votes of native-born voters.

For these reasons, and for more, Massachusetts will feel the onward march of the forces, and this good old Commonwealth will rejoice to see women in new fields of usefulness and co-operation, voting for the best interests of the nation.

MRS. MARION B. KELLEY, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Equal Suffrage movement:

Massachusetts soon will follow these States that have so well overcome former prejudices.

Now it is a matter of time. Pennsylvania may fall into line before the State, but we need look for many changes in the next four years. In fact in this State we have made such advances in the association that women should be able to elect a Governor in less than ten years.

No one can tell anything about this campaign, but there is gre-ed for encouragement that the leaders of the cause are finding everywhere. The increased usefulness and unselfishness of women are factors in the today that are having an indirect influence on the nation.

The civic and personal problems are no longer for men see alone. Women today are taking an active and personal interests in many objects that concern the best interests of the nation. All this is contributing silently but surely to radical changes, which means that Massachusetts cannot fail to be numbered with the States which want to be distinguished as in the vanguard.

Stop, look and listen, Massachusetts may surprise us before long by the adoption of woman suffrage.

WOMEN TO FOREGO SILK HOSE TO WIN CONNECTICUT VOTE

GREENWICH, Ct., Nov. 9.—The Greenwich Equal Franchise League, composed of women of high social degree, has pledged more than a thousand dollars towards the support of woman suffrage work in the Connecticut Legislature. "And the women are not going to ask their husbands for money either. They will shorten their allowance for hats and silk stockings and do without chocolates. Mrs. Ernest Thompson Seton, Miss Caroline Rees, Mrs. E. O. Parker, Miss Elsie Tiemann, Mrs. Ewing, Mrs. E. P. Williams, Miss Mary Ely, the Misses Connor, Mrs. E. C. Ray and Mrs. A. L. Richardson are among those who will forego luxuries.

Boston Has Grandfather at 38 Man After Dr. Eliot's Model

HE'S A GRANDPA, HONEST!

"I Believe in Early Marriages, and Am In Hearty Accord with Dr. Eliot," Says Dorchester Man Who Married at 18.

In the picture are Lewis R. Sullivan, his daughter, Mrs. Ida M. Hindel, at his granddaughter, Doris Hindel, fourteen months old.

The postponed marriage has the great disadvantage that a man cannot begin to enjoy grandchildren till he is almost too old to do so completely. A young grandfather is a very pleasant object.—Charles W. Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard.

Dr Eliot owes congratulations to Lewis R. Sullivan, just elected to the House of Representative from Ward 20 Dorchester. Sullivan is the youngest grandfather in New England, up to date. He is thirty-eight.

Young Grandpa Sullivan has another distinction—as a brother Benjamin F. Sullivan, of Ward 1 East Boston will serve in the House with him, having been re-elected. Old State House men can't recall another Sullivan Bros. like this.

Sullivan, the Dorchester one was married when he was eighteen. His daughter Ida, became Mrs Ida M Hindle when she was sixteen. She is now a young lady. Doris, fourteen months old.

"Doris is the cutest little baby in Dorchester," said grandpa yesterday.

But the chances are that Mr. Sullivan will not stop at being a grandfather. Should Doris marry as young as her mother grandpa might become a great-grandfather at about fifty-five, and still pursuing the same calculation, he might become a great great grandfather at threescore years and ten or so.

Mr Sullivan is the father of seven children, four boys and three girls. Mrs. Hindel is the oldest. Three years ago, before her marriage, she won the first prize in the AMERICAN'S European tour contest for school children.

"I believe in early marriages and am hearty accord with Dr Eliot," said Mr Sullivan. "The average length of a man's life is forty years. Many men die at this age and leave a widow and helpless children. This would be avoided in a measure by early marriages."

The Representative-elect has been for several years legislative agent for the Boston Central Labor Union.

PROGRESSIVES HOLD BIG TEMPLE RALLY

"We Have Just Begun to Fight," the Popular Call by Speakers and Hearers.

Progressives, Bull Moosers and the followers of Colonel Roosevelt packed Tremont Temple last night and began anew the fight for the third political party. It was the most unusual rally ever held by a political party in Massachusetts. It followed a national defeat. But from floor and gallery rang out the words of John Paul Jones, "we have just begun to fight." The saying of the great American admiral was the keynote of the meeting. All through speakers in succession voiced the sentiment of John Paul Jones.

Winston Churchill, defeated as a Progressive for Governor of New Hampshire; Rev Fraser Metzger, defeated for Governor of Vermont, Charles S. Bird, defeated for Governor of Massachusetts, all proclaimed that the Progressive fight had just begun and that it would be continued until the Progressives either absorbed the Republican party or until the Republican party got closer to the people.

Governor Robert P. Bass of New Hampshire followed the three defeated candidates for governors in New England States with a stirring Progressive speech.

"Our fight is just begun," said Governor Bass. "We'll be neither deluded nor tortured in the days to come. The party we have founded is a party that is to stay."

Preceding the Tremont Temple rally Progressives from New England, 400 in number, gathered for a dinner at Ford Hall. Candidates on the Bull Moose ticket from all over Massachusetts were there, and officers of the city and town committees. Matthew Hale presided as he did later at Tremont Temple.

Addresses were made by Governor Bass, Professor George W. Kirchway of Princeton University, Charles S. Bird, Rev Fraser Metzger, Winston Churchill and Charles H. Thompson of Vermont.

CHILD'S BODY BROKE OUT IN TOOTH RASH

From Waist to Feet Covered with Large Blisters. Suffered Dreadfully. Could Not Sleep. In Two Weeks Completely Cured by Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

R. F. D., Box 92, Thornton, R. I.—"When my little girl was two months old she had erythema or tooth rash. The lower part of her body broke out in a rash which started in the form of small pimples. In a day or so the pimples formed a white head which broke causing a watery discharge to run from it. In a week the baby's body from her waist to her feet looked as if it had been burned, being covered with large blisters which broke open leaving the flesh exposed and causing the child intense suffering. I had an ointment to use on her every two hours. It did not do her any good, in fact she seemed to get worse and she suffered dreadfully. Someone told me they had never seen such a bad case on any child. She could not sleep and cried continually. She continued to suffer for five weeks the blisters spreading all the time. Then I tried Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I bathed her in warm water with plenty of Cuticura Soap and covered the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment. The second morning we were surprised at the improvement in her and in two weeks she was completely cured. I have used nothing but Cuticura Soap on my youngest child since its birth." (Signed) Mrs. Sara Richmond, Jan. 11, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment are sold throughout the world. A single set is often sufficient. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

MARY YOUNG, CELEBRATED ACTRESS AND HER AUTOPIANO

A great many people have in their home what is practically a "dead piano." No one knows how to play it—son and daughter who used to play and entertain the family have married and the piano is now merely an expensive ornament. Now is the time to get an Autopiano—put in the music roll, start it—That's all you have to do.

Will play for you (without any knowledge of music or playing on your part) the world's greatest music new and old. All open and popular music procured for the Autopiano as soon as published.

WE WILL TAKE YOUR PIANO IN EXCHANGE AND AT LOW YOU FULL VALUE

THE ELECTION BEING OVER REMOVES ONE FINANCIAL CLOUD AND FORMS ANOTHER

The bonds which have restricted stock trading for the past three or four weeks have been partially severed and the market has made a substantial advance. The fact that the election is over, the victory most decisive and the expectations of Wall Street fully borne out that there would be a landslide for the Democratic party, gave great stimulus to the market. The security markets have taken the election philosophically, the published opinions of bankers, railroad presidents and big business men in general, as to the future outlook as a result of the election, have all been optimistic.

The basis of their optimism is that our fundamental position is unprecedentedly strong. They cite our enormously big crops, bank clearings, foreign credit, increased railroad traffic and revival in industrial activity as the leading factors tending to prove their views. It now happens, as a result of the Democratic victory, that in place of the election cloud which has evaporated we have the tariff tinkering cloud in its stead.

TREND OF MARKETS STILL UNCERTAIN.

There is certainly fair argument on both sides of the question of the stock market values in relation to conditions and prospects, not only mercantile, but political and economic, and the Balkan fracas is not settled by any means. While it is true that the market had a sharp advance on Wednesday and Thursday, the action of certain stocks have made it appear that they were being supported to help heavy trading which was taking place in some others. The rise seemed too rapid, the trading practically all professional, and London which on Thursday had purchased about 50,000 shares of our securities, turned about on Friday and the result was sold that many, if not more. A very large short interest was forced to cover by the rapid rise, and the technical position, therefore, has been weakened just so much.

Undoubtedly the large financial interests own the bulk of the stocks, and as they must make a rising market, in order to unload their holdings, the impression will be sent forth that business will not be affected irrespective of any tariff legislation

Tariff Talk Depressing.

At the present time business looks prosperous and our record-breaking crops ought to keep the wheels of industry humming for some time, but much depends on the actions and policies of the new controlling power. It is quite generally remarked that prosperity and Democracy as a rule don't mix. The tariff question is the leading topic of the moment and it has often been predicted that business depression and, possibly disaster would follow a drastic tariff revision. The industries most frequently mentioned as likely to suffer from a lowering of the tariff are the steel manufacturers, sugar refineries and New England cotton mills. The principal competitors of our steel companies are the English and German manufacturers, and a comparison of their price lists with those of American concerns provides all possibility of their competing successfully against domestic manufacturers at the present time, at least.

The American Beet Sugar Company would undoubtedly be tapped should the sugar tariff be reduced; but the common stock has recently suffered a decline of 11 points in anticipation of a tariff reduction, and the worst features of the outlook for this company seem to have been pretty thoroughly discounted. The American Sugar Refining Company would also be adversely affected by a reduction to such an extent as the Beet Sugar Company.

The effect of a general reduction of tariff on the woolen companies and New England cotton mills is largely problematical. No doubt these interests will suffer, but, in spite of the reputation of the Democratic party for radicalism, it seems inconceivable that the party would bring disaster upon their business interests. In the first place, the prosperity of the country is too largely dependent upon the welfare of these lines of trade, and Democratic party leaders, and President elect Wilson in particular, are, it is believed, shrewd enough to know that legislation which would materially injure these industries would simply act as a boomerang to the party.

The Copper Surplus.

The increase of 13,679,000 pounds in refinery stocks of copper in the country as shown by the October statement of the Copper Producers' Association, follows a 16,866,000 pound increase in September, the two months showing a combined increase of over 30,000,000 pounds.

The October increase was directly traceable to the very heavy shrinkage in exports to 67,402,000 pounds, against the record of 80,000,000 pounds in September and over 70,000,000 pounds in August. Deliveries to American manufacturers in October broke all records at over 84,000,000 pounds, or an increase of 20,000,000 pounds, over previous month. Refinery production was also close to the record high at 145,400,000 pounds.

The increase in the American surplus during the past two months has brought the first decrease for the year 1912 down to 12,709,000 pounds. We tabulate below the decreases and increases since January 1:

	Decrease.	Increase.
January	$2,174,000
February	3,300,000
March	372,000
April		2,958,000
May	15,450,000
June	5,200,000
July
August	8,870,000	8,946,000
September		16,864,000
October		13,679,000
Total	51,366,000	38,667,000
Net decrease		12,709,000

New Nipissing Mill.

A dispatch from the Nipissing properties states that the new mill will be placed in commission by November 15. This new mill at Nipissing is of 200 tons rated daily capacity and may somewhat exceed this figure in actual practice. The management estimates that this plant should show net earnings of not over $500,000 and $600,000 a year, which would be in addition to the revenue derived from high-grade ore. It is stated that there are approximately 100,000 tons of low-grade ore in the dumps already at the mine, which it is believed will run twenty five ounces per ton.

Nipissing has made a very creditable showing as regards the payments on the new mill. The cost of this plant, with the tramway is put at $283,000, and the company has paid this out of earnings and encroached upon the surplus, and this in the face of the present dividend of 20 per cent. per annum, calling for a yearly payment of $1,600,000.

Quincy Mining Company.

While a date has not been set for the next dividend meeting of Quincy Mining Company directors, it will be held within the next fortnight, at which time an increase over the $1.25 per share paid the last few quarters appears possible.

The company's production cost has increased of late by reason of higher wages paid employees This is true of all the Lake producers. The higher cost may be to some extent a period of the top prices which Quincy metal has commanded has, of course, more than offset the wage item Shortage of labor will result in a smaller output for the year by between 3,500,000 and 2,000,000 pounds.

Chino Developments.

While Chino has been attracting a great deal of attention of late in view of the excellent results which have been obtained at the property, and which have clearly demonstrated the mine's ability to turn out a much larger copper production than the originally estimated at a greatly reduced cost, there is another side to this great porphyry mine which is not being lost sight of by those in close touch with the situation. This is the possibility of largely increasing the tonnage and a further increase in the capacity of the concentrator.

The last estimate of Chino's ore reserves was made October 1, 1911, at 30,000,000 tons when general prospecting ceased. At that time sufficient drilling had been done to indicate, in addition to the estimated tonnage, the existence of large and rich bodies of commercial grade lying southwest of the Carrasco section. Recent holes which were drilled for the purpose of locating barren territory for the dumping of overburden have encountered ore where least expected. And the indications are that a considerable tonnage will ultimately be developed in that section. It is believed that several million tons have already been indicated by this work

Chino, with its large area, has excellent possibilities of increasing its ore reserves. The management not only believes that a large extension will be made to the Carrasco ore body, but that a number of tonnage will be developed in the section of the property lying eastward of the Carrasco section, an area which the company's geologists look upon as very attractive.

There seems to be little doubt that Chino will ultimately increase its concentrator capacity by the addition of more units. The water situation has always been the weakest link in the Chino chain and it has not yet been determined what maximum tonnage can be treated by reducing the water, which method is now being tried. However, the management feels confident that it is only a question of further expenses to develop sufficient water for any tonnage desired and are not regarding seriously this feature of the increased capacity.

REACTION AFTER ELECTION SPURT

Chino and Sears-Roebuck Make New High Records; Big Corn Crop a Surprise.

By THOMAS C. SHOTWELL.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—Although all the news in Wall Street that might reasonably would tend to increase the value of stocks, the market was somewhat reactionary. The reaction was due to the rapid advance since the election, even though a strong bear party attempted to raid the market in the morning. Stocks were well taken. The bear element seems to be waiting for the fall of Congress enough and the decisions from the opening hearings on Union Pacific merger and the Minnesota rate cases. In the meantime they are satisfied to stand and take what the bears have to offer. The close was quiet, with fractional losses showing in most issues.

Two new high records were established during the day, one by Chino at 50½ and the other by Sears, Roebuck at 91 1-4. The latter was introduced to Wall Street at 8 about three years ago at 37 and continued a power of strength, and the accumulation of Missouri Pacific attracted attention.

Big Corn Crop a Surprise.

Although everything was prepared for a good crop report, the announcement made by the government in regard to corn was even better than had been expected. The total crop this year is given at 3,160,137,000 bushels, which compares with an estimate a month ago of 3,016,000,000 bushels. More important than the number of bushels is the report as to the quality of the grain. This year the quality is 1.81 per cent., which compares with a quality of 80.6 per cent. last year. The ten year average is 84.5 per cent. This means that all the corn this year is big ears or solid grains, so that every bushel is available for food. It means that the yield per acre is 25 per cent more than last year a crop, and the most conservative statement that can be made in regard to the corn crop is that this year's harvest is the equivalent in every way of 4,000,000,000 bushels of any other year. As the farmers have fewer animals than ever before to eat the corn the export movement should be enormous. Incidentally, prices are low, and that may have an important bearing on the prices of securities later in the season

The cotton crops, as estimated by the government Friday, will be about three and a half million bales. Exports of cotton are running about as large as they did a year ago, and the price is only 37 a bale less. The heavy movement of grain and cotton is making ocean rates firm and is more than balancing the sales of American securities by Europe. Another batch of European stocks, it is said, arrived in Wall Street, the amount being estimated at something between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000 worth

Another Bumper Yield Expected.

One most important feature of the situation is that the surplus this year is so large that even a crop failure would not do the country great damage next year. But the testimony of all crop experts is that the soil is in such splendid condition that another bumper crop is to be expected next year. Conditions in connection with the planting of winter wheat are ideal.

The copper producers reported that stocks of metal on hand November 1 were 13,679,317 pounds greater than on October 1. The Boston Curb quotes Braden, but in stocks is not a bearish argument on copper securities, because if there had not been an increase of stocks, and if the price of the metal had advanced much higher users of copper would have turned to other materials, and there would have been a severe slump, which is now prevented by the increase of the metal. It would be the best thing for the copper securities if the price would fall back under 13 cents per a pound.

The fact that the copper situation is considered healthy is shown in the prices yesterday of Calno and Braden, two of the low-cost producers, and also the advance made for bonds of the Mason Valley Company, a new company that is just beginning to attract attention with its production raised to the basis of about 20,000,000 pounds a year. Calno is reported to sell at 84 a share dividend beginning with the new year, and Mason Valley a 97 a share rate. Nevada Consolidated and Utah Copper enjoyed strength yesterday.

War Hurts Copper Trade.

The increase of copper stocks was due entirely to the falling off in foreign demand. Domestic consumption increased materially. The foreign reduction can be attributed entirely to the war, which has rendered six Europe conservative. The amount of copper in the cartridges is a war is but slight, compared with the copper that would be used by the same men if engaged in peaceful industries.

Some cheerfulness was infused into the market by the action of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners in permitting the advance of a few rates in the Ohio River and Gulf and Illinois Central. Which operates partly in that territory, reported yesterday an increase of $1,250,516 in gross earnings for the month of October. This road is finally getting in a condition of working order, and its figures for 1913 will justify all that was said and done regarding the value of the flood in the Mississippi.

Money did not go above 6 per cent yesterday and the call loan showed a gain of about $1,000,000 on known movements.

Wells, Fargo Earnings.

Wells, Fargo & Company have not suffered as much as other express companies as a result of orders issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission, according to the showing made in the annual report announced yesterday

The United States Express Company, because of a reduction in earnings for the last year and the prospective inauguration of the parcels post system on January 1 next, was forced recently to pass its semi-annual dividend, but the Wells Fargo company reports an increase in surplus over $1,261,255 and an expansion in assets of $3,351,788.

Gross operating revenues for the year were $7,810,696 in excess of those for the previous twelve months, but net operating revenues increased only $139,017.

International & Northern

International & Great Northern directors yesterday declared a dividend of 4 per cent on the $5,000,000 of new 6 per cent stock. This makes 5 per cent. for the year, a dividend of 3 per cent. having been paid last July.

How She Fooled the Doctor

Have you a sick little girl. Ask her, was I real sick with scarlet fever, and have dropsy set in; her face and limbs swelled and her eyes puffed. A leading physician here at the time treated her without the slightest success. A sample of your Swamp-Root having been left at the house at the time I resolved to try it and as it started with the stomach I kept on taking it with grateful results. The inflammation began to subside after she had taken the first 1 pint bottle, and after she took two large bottles she was pronounced cured by the doctor and has been in good health ever since. The doctor came to see her every day and examined her every second day until he pronounced her kidneys in perfect condition.

Now, you see the doctor was under the impression that I was giving my girl Swamp-Root, but he is mistaken and failed to do a bit of good, and dear, I ought to offend him, I did not tell, and I know it, for Swamp-Root and I'm sure you know the difference. I did not use one drop of his medicine after I started my girl on Swamp-Root, and I have always felt that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root saved my girl's life. Yours truly and gratefully, hundred frat men and sorority girls of the three frats, Eta Rita Pi, Tau Omega Chi and Graha Hunka Fudga, appear during the opening scene and render the opening chorus, "Hah, Hah, for the Frat." There are over 900 young men and women in this opening number and so one of the most attractive plays and best dancers in the play are required in these groups.

College Hero Tomorrow Night

The football men led by Stanwood Miner, tackle, are led by Marcia Thorndike, and basketball girls, led by Miss Fanny Lindy, keep on to the campus for a game; Professor Von Kaiser proceeds to sing the song of the varsity men, and then the football men introduce a realistic football game and get thrown out. Most of the men in this scene are college men and fraternity owners as well as the Prince Hiss (the basket ball girl) introduces a basketball game and when they get through that's of course left to the audience to decide. Then the whole girls rush to the footballers who are lively from a dinner and then proceed to let loose bundles of fun and joy to the other fellows. After which follows some dances, and then let's go to the football game and away to Princeton we go.

It is not long before dark settles over the campus, and suddenly a group of willows, fifty girls, dressed in orange and black ballet costumes, enter. They are the jungle girls, and they have come to serenade the other students. One of their members, Estelle Hall, a part recently well sung by Miss Helen Howard Walker, sings the "Serenade" while the girls accompany her with a clever pantomime accompaniment. Mrs. Robert Beckley is the leader of this clever group of dancers, and most of the girls in the group are from the Junior Charity Club and have appeared successfully in several amateur theatrical performances.

Professor Von Kaiser, who has suddenly awaked, learns that he has only been dreaming and rushes to tell the students of his queer experiences. With the aid of Madam Dashington, in quises of the college, they arrange a big Japanese tea, in honor of Senator Fiske and the gallant sailors of the U. S. S. Iowa, who are cruising near Sugarhurst College.

Suddenly the lights are flashed on again, and nothing can be seen on the stage but a lot of Japanese parasols. Suddenly a lot of demure little Japanese and Geisha girls' heads appear from behind the parasols, and then all rise and engage in a pretty Oriental dance made effective by quaint Oriental costumes and fans, etc. Then Fi Fi, a sweet little Japanese maid enters, followed closely by her lover, Ki Ki. The charming "Fi Fi" song follows, in which Fi Fi and Ki Ki sing a pretty duet.

Miss Lena Rondell will appear as the pretty Fi Fi and Mr Lee G. Shattuck will be the Ki Ki. This clever couple of society young people render the charming duet with much expression, and the Japanese group led by Miss Katherine Hubbard, and the Geisha group, led by Miss Elsie Bird, also sweet, them in this novel feature Miss Katherine Hubbard will introduce a Japanese dance, in which she will be assisted by Mr. Alanson Stoyle.

HOW TO ACQUIRE HEALTH AND BEAUTY

TO PURIFY THE BLOOD — When cold sores, blotches or skin frequently appear on the face, it simply boils and other eruptions show that your blood is impure. Take one tablespoonful of Sulphur and Cream of Tartar Compound three times daily after meals and you will soon see a wonderful change in your appearance. This is a reliable blood cleanser and to make a good, old-fashioned system tonic of tried merit, get from any drug store an ounce of Iarlinol, dissolve this and a cupful of sugar in a half pint of hot water, add whiskey then add enough hot water to make a quart. A tablespoonful of this tonic before each meal will soon clear the blood of all impurities, restore lost appetite and bring back the ruddy glow of health to the cheeks. There is nothing to compare with this simple tonic for toning up the body and doing away with that run down, tired feeling.

THIN, RAGGED HAIRS—Disfiguring hair or fuzz can be permanently removed with a paste made by mixing together a little delatone and water. This should be applied to hairy surface for two or three minutes, then removed and the skin washed. This simple treatment removes every trace of hair and leaves the skin free from spots or blemish.

SIMPLE TONIC—For anyone whose eyes are inflamed, weak or expressionless, the following tonic will be very helpful: Dissolve an ounce of cryptos in a pint of water and put a few drops in the eyes twice daily. This tonic is very strengthening and soothing to weak or inflamed eyes. For darkening the eyes and making them beautiful and sparkling it is splendid. Occultists use it for treating granulated lids, and it is a great aid to those who wear glasses.

TO SHAMPOO QUICKLY—Ordinary shampoo methods are time-consuming and very tiresome. However, if you will try a teaspoonful of ea-nathra dissolved in a cup of hot water, you will have a shampoo that cleanses perfectly, rinses easily and dries in just a few minutes. This simple shampoo is inexpensive and recommended very highly by hairdressers. It removes dandruff and irritation of the scalp and leaves the hair soft, glossy and fluffy. It does not streak or bleach the hair like soap shampoos and is often spoken of as "the perfect shampoo."

CREAMLESS FACE CREAM — To make a complexion cream jelly that will not cause hair to grow on the face, dissolve one ounce almonds in one-half pint cold water, then add two teaspoonfuls glycerine. Stir and let stand over night. This cream-jelly is very fine for cleaning the skin, as it removes all powders and leaves the skin soft and smooth. It is splendid for massage purposes, also for reducing large pores, removing black heads, freckles, wrinkles and skin pimples. For a chapped skin it is very healing and soothing. Advertisement

Astute Leaders of Belfast Riots [illegible] Dumb as Oysters Confident.

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN.

Sir Edward Carson and his brother officers of the mighty army that is to fight the coming Irish parliament and break it into smithereens despite all the King's horses and all the King's men of the empire [illegible] to experience a [illegible]

[illegible] made some awful threats when he was addressing his cohorts in Belfast the other day as to making "Home Rule" when he got back to the House of Commons. But for some reason or other [illegible] Parliament has [illegible] weeks and the [illegible] are like so many pens of sheep in a good old-fashioned Quaker [illegible]

[illegible] noted in debates by British Liberal members of Parliament, has proved that there are [illegible] Carson bowls like a dervish in Exeter Hall, but the other Carson as he takes his seat in the Commons is as gentle and as harmless that a witty writer in the parliamentary press gallery [illegible] recently to "the gentle, rippling ripple of a babbling [illegible]

[illegible] of the mightily pro[illegible] rule bill says that all [illegible] been lowered and every [illegible] to be possession that [illegible] that the bill safely [illegible] a sharp lookout must [illegible] kept for reefs and hidden rocks.

Funny Show of Arms.

[illegible] of the International News Service in London paid a visit a few [illegible] to the [illegible] [illegible] for the [illegible] [illegible] from Belfast [illegible] Here is Mr. Everett's report of what he saw in his own words:

"For the peace of mind of these [illegible] I hope [illegible] that [illegible] among [illegible] [illegible] Loyal arms must be [illegible] shooting, if they are to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] weapons to a man person and ask him to face government soldiers would be an insult. The famous ocean might as well at once be [illegible] to something like this. 'Ulster won't bite, and Ulster will be right.'

It is hard to suppress a laugh when you look at these arms. Even in appearance they compare unfavorably with the blowpipe and arrow of the savage tribesmen. One is merely a rough shaped piece of [illegible] painted, and having a crude [illegible] guard which, as a piece of [illegible] would disgrace the village blacksmith's apprentice in his first week of instruction.

Might Deceive a Child.

"A second pretends a little more. Seen from an aeroplane at a mile distance, it might deceive a child. It had a barrel of thin iron, clamped to the stock with pieces of tin, and quite incapable of sustaining the [illegible] of anything approaching a full charge of powder. A service cartridge would send the ornamental career of the barrel and blow the 'marksman' to a place where rifles are of no use.

"It may be noted, also, that although there is an imitation of the hammer of a very old-fashioned shotgun, capable of exploding a percussion cap, there is no connection provided between the exploded material and the interior of the barrel.

"[illegible] on the mechanism of the Lee-Enfield rifle is cruelly imitated, but here, as [illegible] are no makers [illegible] a charge, and the barrel could not stand it if there were. It is of the same thickness all [illegible] there is no explosion chamber and [illegible] of about the thickness [illegible] trading can.

"Finally, it is clear that the brave rebel leaders do not intend that their misguided followers should ever come [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] largest nor means of firing it on either of the three scientific weapons."

Would Like the Ermine.

It must not be lost sight of that there is a good deal of method mixed with the madness of those promoters of Orange riot opposition to home rule. Both Carson and F. E. Smith, the Liverpool Tory leader, are members of the bar. Both would like to be judges. Indeed, Sir Edward Carson has [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] that will be lord chancellor of Ireland in the next Tory administration. Hence this noise. Paradoxical though it be, the more noise a Tory lawyer makes in opposition to a popular measure, the surer he is of being elevated to the quiet dignity of the judicial bench. There is, however, but faint promise that the ermine will [illegible] the shoulders of Sir Edward Carson or Smith in the immediate future.

Meanwhile, while they are waiting for the ermine and the wig, both the doughty defenders of the constitution against the crown are paying close and respectful heed to Premier Asquith's warning of the danger they incur who attempt to strike a deadly blow at the foundations of democratic government.

Mr. O'Neil on "Citizenship."

On Tuesday evening Mrs. John T. Connor will donate the dinner. She will be assisted by Mrs. William E. Cunningham and Mrs. William M. Brummett. Mrs. John J. What tables will be arranged during the afternoon and evening in the adjacent parlors. Several attractive souvenirs will be given. The tearoom in charge of Mrs. John Brown will occupy a conspicuous place in the music room.

One of the attractions will be the exhibition of a doll seventy-nine years old, the gift of the Misses Agnes and Ruth [illegible] of Highland street, Roxbury. The doll was purchased for a girl named [illegible] at the first sale held by the house in 1833.

An invitation is issued by the sisters in charge of the home to those who wish to assist in the work of caring for 185 orphan children during the Winter. Some idea of the expense of the undertaking may be gleaned from the fact that $50 a month is required for repairing the shoes alone of this band of active little charges.

No effort is being spared by the members of the guild to make the sale the most successful in the history of the institution. The decorated tables will be arranged about the assembly hall. They will be under the direction of the following committees:

DWYER IN SWEET MELODY.

Popular Tenor Will Be Heard During Temple Course.

Since the announcement that Michael J. Dwyer intended to sing a program of Irish songs at the second concert of the Tremont Temple concert course he has received many requests for favorite songs from the Irish people of Boston, but he has practically decided upon the following selections which will undoubtedly please all lovers of Irish melody.

Love songs—"The Lass o' Clear Air," Ferguson, an Irish love song, "Hinnoon"; "Molly Bawn," Lover.

Songs of sorrow (among)—"Dirdrein Machree," the land of sweet Erin; "The Emigrant's Lament," Lady Dufferin; "Miss Sorrow Thy Young Days Shaded," Moore.

Patriotic songs—"The Irishman," James Orr; "The West's Asleep," Davis; "The Wearin of the Green," old ballad.

Miss Edith Barnes of the Boston Opera [illegible] with the National Opera this week but writes from Montreal that she will sing "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," "The Harp of Tara," "Let Erin Remember," and several modern Irish national ballads.

FEW A. O. H. CHANGES IN SUFFOLK OFFICERS

President Harold of Waltham to Begin Official Tour in January.

The constitution of the A. O. H. provides that nominations and election of officers shall be held in December.

Here in Suffolk County there will be few changes according to reports, as the members are content that every effort in their behalf is being made by the officials to increase the membership and guard the finances of the order. In a number of instances the presiding officer has served several terms and would be glad of an opportunity to pass over the reins to a younger man. But the old-time member likes to see the familiar figure in the chair, and it then becomes the duty of the officer to grit and serve another term.

For a number of years Suffolk County has had a board composed of representatives from each of the counties that comprised specially and in splendid style.

The coming board will have a number of important questions to handle and under the guidance of County President Fred J. McLaughlin the rank and file are sanguine that the A. O. H. in this district will have a banner year.

A county board meeting will be called for Sunday afternoon, December 29.

County President James J. Harold of Waltham will make an official tour of Middlesex County, commencing January 1. He is now corresponding with the several presidents with a view to increasing the membership along the lines suggested by National President James J. Regan in his last message to the members.

County President Patrick J. Ferguson of Quincy is looking over the ground in Norfolk County, as he is anxious to have a number of divisions of juvenile cadets instituted before the end of his term.

Norfolk County is one of the best organized counties from an A. O. H. standpoint, in the United States.

Division 53 of the North End will have its annual smoke talk at 183 Hanover street on Thanksgiving afternoon. Colonel Charles McCarthy will be toastmaster.

Division 10 of Chelsea will have a large class initiation at the next meeting.

Vice-President John J. Curley, Treasurer Patrick J. Burns and Charles E. O'Donnell are the committee of arrangements for the members and guests of Division 20 at the meeting scheduled for Sunday evening December 1.

Auxiliary 5 of Roxbury will admit an other large class of candidates at the meeting to be held in Bradley Hall, Oriental Building, on Wednesday evening, November 20.

A meeting of the directors of the Boston Highlands Hibernian Building Association will be held next Wednesday evening. President Patrick J. Larkins and Secretary John T. Hussey are happy at the success that results obtained at the last few meetings. The new building on Dudley street will be a monument to the earnest work and enterprise of those men and their associates

AND ZIPP! JUST LIKE THAT HE GETS A MILLION! ONE OF THE MANY FUNNY SCENES FROM "BROADWAY JONES"

Broadway Jones, one of the most willing little spenders along where the lights are bright—all night—has just confided to his friend Wallace that he is broke.

WALLACE—Why, you always gave me to understand that you were a millionaire.

JACKSON—Well, I died a little. At that, I dare say I could have been worth a million by now if I'd had any business ability with the bank roll I had to go with. When I came here to New York and started to burn up Broadway about five years ago, I was worth $250,000. My father died and left me that when I was ten years old. I didn't come into it till I was twenty-one. About $.5,000 in cash, some real estate and half interest in a chewing-gum factory. The first thing I did was to get rid of the real estate and sell out my interest in the gum factory. I wanted cash—hadn't any use for anything else. My father's partner, his brother (my uncle, old Andrew Jones) bought me out, and cheated me, too. A measly hundred thousand, that's all I got. Since then I understand he's made a dozen fortunes with the darned old gum. I hear the Gum Trust offered him a million dollars for the plant last year. You've heard me speak of the gum?

WALLACE—Yes, Jones' Pepsin.

JACKSON—It's the oldest gum on the market. Ever chew it?

WALLACE—No.

JACKSON—Don't. It's awful!

WALLACE—Well, go on, tell me what happened

JACKSON—Nothing happened except that I couldn't wait to get hold of the money and get out of that town. I wanted New York, nothing but New York. I read New York. I talked New York. I dreamed New York. Why, from the time I was sixteen years old to the day I left that town everybody in Jonesville called me Broadway.

WALLACE—Broadway?

JACKSON—Yes, just because I wore patent leather shoes and put on a clean collar every day. Oh, I've lived up to the name. I know every newsboy, policeman, actor, chorus girl, bartender and wine agent in the Street. I've been to bed just one night in five years before four o'clock in the morning, and that was because I had a toothache and my face was swollen. Oh, it wasn't the pain that kept me in—it was the looks of the thing. Oh, what I haven't done to Broadway. Well, you've been with me you know!

WALLACE—And now you're fifty thousand dollars in debt.

JACKSON—I don't know the exact amount, but that's a fairly good guess.

WALLACE—Well, you've kept it pretty quiet. It hasn't seemed to worry you much.

JACKSON—It hasn't, eh? Well, I don't mind telling you the first month I was broke I bet I walked to Chicago and back every night, if you measured the carpet by the mile. I thought so much and worried so much that I didn't dare trust myself alone. I had the weirdest ideas. Do you know that I belong to the Salvation Army?

WALLACE—What?

JACKSON—On the level. I went over to Newark and joined it about three months ago.

WALLACE—What was the idea.

JACKSON—I thought it would be a good way to forget my troubles. I played the bass drum for two nights and couldn't stand it any longer. Have you ever been to Newark?

WALLACE—Yes.

JACKSON—Well, then you can understand. Oh, you can't realize what I've been through, Bob. I've made a bluff and pretended to be happy all along, but there have been times when I've actually started for that old Brooklyn Bridge.

WALLACE—But your uncle? He's a rich man—did you try him?

JACKSON—Yes, he's been tried and found guilty. I wrote and told him I was short of ready cash, and asked him to loan me ten thousand dollars.

WALLACE—Did he answer?

JACKSON—Yes, sent me a package of gum and a note saying, "Chew this and forget your troubles." He's in Europe now; been there all Summer. That old fellow's worth two million if he's worth a nickel.

WALLACE—Stingy?

JACKSON—Stingy! He's so mean that every time he's asked to have a drink he takes a cigar—and he doesn't smoke, either; saves 'em up and puts 'em in boxes and gives them to his friends for Christmas.

RANKIN (entering)—A gentleman to see you, sir.

JACKSON—Didn't I just tell you I wasn't home?

RANKIN—I told him that, sir, but he says he'll wait. He says it's imperative that he should consult with you on some matter as soon as possible.

JACKSON—Peter Pembroke. I don't even know him.

RANKIN—He appears to be a man of some importance, sir.

JACKSON—Is that so? All right, show him in.

(Pembroke enters.)

PEMBROKE—Of course, you expected me?

JACKSON—Expected you?

PEMBROKE—Why, yes; didn't Mr. Spotswood wire you that I'd come?

JACKSON—You mean old Judge Spotswood of Jonesville? No, he didn't wire me.

PEMBROKE—That's strange. I talked with him over the long distance 'phone less than an hour ago, and he told me that he had wired you early this morning.

JACKSON—Wait! Hold on a minute. Rankin did hand me a telegram. What the deuce did I do with it? Oh, here it is. Now what do you think of that? I forgot to open it. (Reads telegram.) "Cable received from Dr. Graham, London, England, announcing your uncle's demise, received late last night. His will and testament, made prior to his sailing, puts you in possession of the estate. His entire fortune, his business, his every earthly belonging, he leaves unconditionally to you, his nephew and only heir. Shall I come to New York, or shall I expect you here? Pembroke, of the Consolidated Chewing Gum Company, will call on you in New York today. Answer at once." Great Scott!

PEMBROKE—I'm awfully sorry for you, young man.

JACKSON—You are?

PEMBROKE—Ah, yes; something we all have to go through.

JACKSON—Oh, I'll go through it all right.

PEMBROKE—Your uncle was worth his weight in gold.

JACKSON—How much was he worth, do you think?

PEMBROKE—That I can't say. We offered him twelve hundred thousand for his business and good will less than two months ago. The proposition still holds good, Mr. Jones. We stand ready to close the deal in forty-eight hours. I realize that in your time of trouble and grief it is harsh right to discuss business affairs, but it is vitally important that we bring the matter to a closing point by Saturday noon, as we are considering the Spearmint Company at the same time, but our preference leans toward the Jones' gum, and we—

JACKSON—Wait a minute. Whom we? What do you mean, by we?

PEMBROKE—I'm referring to the company of which I have the honor of being second vice-president, Mr. Jones—the Consolidated Chewing Gum Company of America.

JACKSON—Hold on. Let me get this straight. Your people want to buy Jones' Gum?

PEMBROKE—We do.

JACKSON—And you're willing to pay twelve hundred thousand dollars for it?

PEMBROKE—The top price.

JACKSON—Where's the money? Have you got it with you?

PEMBROKE—Do you mean business.

JACKSON—Certainly I mean business. Don't I look like a business man? Look at that business suit. See, I've got a pencil and everything. Certainly I mean business.

PEMBROKE—You mean you'll sign the articles today?

JACKSON—For twelve hundred thousand dollars I'd sign a murder confession.

PEMBROKE—We'll meet here at two.

JACKSON—I'll be right here waiting.

PEMBROKE—Will you shake hands with me?

JACKSON—I'll kiss you if you want me to.

PEMBROKE—Goodby. (Goes out.)

JACKSON—Be careful crossing the street. Don't let anything happen now! That's the first time I knew they could telegraph from heaven.

WALLACE (entering)—What's the matter—going crazy all over again?

JACKSON—Do you know what happened after you left the room? A messenger boy with golden wings blew in through the window, handed me this message and flew right back to the golden gate. Read it.

WALLACE (reads telegram)—Is this a joke?

JACKSON—If it is I'll make a reputation as a gun man.

WALLACE—Why, this is the most wonderful thing that ever happened.

JACKSON—Do you know what I'm going to do! I'm going to buy Brooklyn and close it up!

HEINE—What did you think of the verdict in the Becker case?

HONUS—I was surprised As soon as I heard that the jury had eaten a meal consisting of a bushel basket of sandwiches, together with cheese, doughnuts, pie, coffee, pickles, ice cream and buttermilk, I expected a "disagreement."

HEINE—How could a jury acquit a man after a meal like that?

HONUS—It's a wonder that they didn't bring a verdict against the state of indigestion in the first degree. It was bad enough to have the gangsters threaten the lives of the witnesses; why should the State threaten the lives of the jury? McIntyre should have objected to the introduction of such food.

HEINE—I don't see how he overlooked that. He objected to everything else

HONUS—Objections is the first duty of a lawyer. As soon as he comes into the court he's got to make himself objectionable.

HEINE—I see the papers say that the way McIntyre handled the trial was exceptional.

HONUS—It was. He took exceptions to everything from the way that the Judge parted his hair to the size of the Prosecuting Attorney's feet

HEINE—Do you think I could ever be a lawyer?

HONUS—Why not? You can talk as long without saying anything as any man I ever met

HEINE—I thought a lawyer had to have a lot of brains.

HONUS—Look how many get along without any. There are two kinds of lawyers, poor lawyers and corporation lawyers. What kind of a lawyer do you want to be?

HEINE—Any kind so long as I can make a living at it

HONUS—Then you've got to go into politics.

HEINE—Oh, but I mean an HONEST living.

HONUS—Have you ever been admitted to the bar?

HEINE—Yes, lots of them.

HONUS—Don't you know it takes knowledge to be admitted to the bar?

HEINE—No, all you have to know is the bartender.

HONUS—The bar is a place where they bring up cases.

HEINE—Of beer?

HONUS—The bar has got nothing to do with a saloon

HEINE—I thought it had everything to do with it

HONUS—The bar is where our judges sit from morning till night

HEINE—That accounts for some of their decisions.

HONUS—You see, the first thing when court begins the clerk calls for a case for the judge to try.

HEINE—Is the judge allowed to drink it?

HONUS—Drink what?

HEINE—The case he calls for.

HONUS—He can't drink it. He tries it.

HEINE—How can he try it unless he drinks it?

HONUS—A case isn't nothing to drink. It's a cause of action. When a case is brought up do you know what a cause of action is?

HEINE—Sure!

HONUS—What is a cause of action?

HEINE—Thirst

HONUS—No. There are two kinds of cases, civil and criminal. Do you know the difference between them?

HEINE—I should say so. When you have a case, if you invite somebody to join you, it's civil; if you don't, it's criminal

HONUS—Again you are all wrong. There are two kinds of cases

HEINE—Lumpties and fulls.

HONUS—No. Now, see if you can answer this: When the case comes up, the lawyers open it, and if he finds that there is nothing in it, it is thrown out by the court.

HEINE—I don't blame him

HONUS—But if the case is all right they get a jury to sit on it.

HEINE—The jury sits on the case?

HONUS—Sure! According to law, it must be presented to them. Then, while the lawyers are arguing about it, the witnesses are swearing about it, the judge thinking about it, is deciding about it and the jury is the court stenographer puts it all down.

HEINE—The whole case?

HONUS—Yes. He gets big money for that.

HEINE—That settles it. I don't want to be a lawyer. I'm going to be a court stenographer.

Best Stories of the Week

Didn't Recognize It.

A PLAYER of bridge in New York, who considered himself a great authority, wrote a book on the subject and sent it to a famous Rochester player for his opinion of it. In about a week the book was returned to him, with the following letter:

"My Dear Sir:

"Your favor of the tenth inst., accompanied by your book, was duly received. In my opinion it is a very good game, but I don't think it is as good a game as bridge.

"Yours very truly,

"FRANK CARD."

Peace With Its Horrors.

Grocer's Wife (anxiously)—Oh, Jim, are you hurt?

Grocer (savagely, but with dignity)—Go 'way, woman. What do you know about war?

Some Touch.

ONE of two darkies who run a bootblack "parlor" in partnership was bragging of his well-developed sense of touch, particularly in the matter of money. He boasted that he could tell the denomination of any United States coin merely feeling it. His partner wearied of these boasts and came back with this:

"Your sense o' feelin' ain't nothing to my friend Marcus. Him and me used to work on the Pullman down through Kansas. Marcus had been on this route for about ten years. One night when we was both a-sleepin', 'long around midnight I wakes up and I shakes Marcus and I says: 'Marcus, where are we?' An' Marcus he jest rolls over and sticks his hand out the window and he says: 'We're goin' through Oswego.'"

Appearances Against Him.

A VERY bald banker in southern Maryland was in the habit of wearing his hat a good deal during business hours, as protection from flies in Summer and cold breezes in Winter

Every week a negro woraman on the railroad presented a check and drew his wages, and one day, as he put the money in a greasy wallet, the banker said

"Look here, Moses, why don't you let some of that money stay in the bank and keep an account with us?"

One Way to Dodge 'Em.

A WASHINGTON man went for his vacation to a fly-haunted hotel in Connecticut. There was a hammock in the grove behind the hotel, and one afternoon our friend climbed into it with pipe and book. But the flies tormented him unmercifully, so he climbed out again in disgust.

"Look here, landlord," he complained, as he entered the office, "what's the good of a hammock in such a fly-ridden spot as that grove?"

"Oh," said the landlord, "you didn't use the hammock during hammock hours"

"What are hammock hours?" asked the guest

"Twelve to two, sir," said the landlord, "You'll find no flies in the grove, then, sir.

"And why not?" demanded the puzzled guest.

Because," said the landlord, "twelve to two is dinner, and they're all in the dining-room then."

Didn't Expect It.

A MISSION worker of New Orleans was visiting a reformatory near that city not long ago when she observed among the inmates an old acquaintance, a negro lad long thought to be a model of integrity.

"Jim!" exclaimed the mission worker. "Is it possible I find you here?"

"Yassum," blithely responded the lackeylider. "I'se charged with stealin' a barrel o' sweet pertaters."

The visitor sighed.

"You, Jim!" she repeated. "I am surprised!"

"Yassum," said Jim "So was I, or I wouldn't be here."

The Gentler Sex.

MARY met Emily on the street. They had not seen each other for many years

"Why, how do you do?" exclaimed Mary, effusively, topping off th salutation with a few vague pecks at Emily's face.

Now, this is delightful," said Emily, who was older than Mary. "You haven't seen me for eleven years, and yet you know me at once. I couldn't have changed so dreadfully in all that time. It flatters me"

"I recognized your bonnet."

Human Tape.

"GOLLY, but I'se tired!" exclaimed a tall and thin negro, meeting a short and stout friend on Washington street.

"What you been doin' to get tired?" demanded the other.

"Well," explained the thin one, drawing a deep breath, "over to Brother Smith's day are measurin' de house for some new carpets. Dey haven't got no yawdstick, and I'se just exactly six feet tall. So to oblige Brother Smith I'se been a-lyin' down and a-gettin 'up all over deir house."

We Get This Straight from the Seat of War

Copyright, 1912, by the Star Company Great Britain Rights Reserved.

FROM OUR DARING WAR CORRESPONDENT.

CONSTANTINOPLE, OCT. 28, 1912.—Uskub has fallen to the Servians. We do not know what caused it to fall, but the way the Greekish children scatter banana skins over the sidewalks gives us an idea. Scutari is through scooting, for it is now in the hands of the grinning Montenegrins, and the Bulgars have the bulge on Adrianople, for they are shelling its suburbs. The shelling has been going on so continuously that it is believed the whole place is nutty.

The capture of the Turkish town of Scutari was somewhat delayed owing to the fact that one of the moving picture machines got out of order. The Turks had vacated the forts and all of the soldiers withdrew so that there would be no hitch in the spectacular capture, when the operator raised a purple flag, meaning "Machine out of order." This angered the Turkish government greatly.

The easy conquest of Uskub was a surprise to everyone, for the Uskubeks are all married men of long standing and consequently used to hard fighting. Besides capturing the town, the Servians also captured an indebtedness of $23,456,859 which stands against the town. The City Collector claims he will collect this amount from the Servians or wreck their entire army single-handed. In this connection we predict two things—the money will not be paid and the Servian coroner will have a job soon, provided there is enough of the City Collector gathered together on which to hold an inquest.

The battle of Koumanovo, won after desperate fighting, has discouraged the Turks, and now that the Servians have it, they don't know what to do with it They isn't a Servian officer that can pronounce the name of the city, and it is expected that they will cut the place up into building lots and sell it to New York speculators.

OCTOBER 27.—The Turks have taken Pahregorik

All along the line from Scutari to Adrianople, the Turks are unwilling to take the offensive. They are reluctant and do not seem to have heart enough to take a Turkish bath. It is stated that the reticence of the Turks is caused by the near approach of Thanksgiving Day, but we believe this is only cheap talk by the local humorists.

A strong force of Burglars—or, rather, Bulgars—is moving towards Constantinople, via Provodiya. Any soldier that can find his way through a town with such a name can be set loose in Brooklyn without a guide. The Bulgar army is well-behaved and can tramp miles and miles without taking a night-cap, which is Bulgarianese for gin fez

OCTOBER 28.—Ten thousand Greek stationary venders arrived from Washington street, New York.

The Turks claim that their army is not yet entirely mobilized. They claim that as soon as the 4,000 Turks who went to New York to vote the Progressive ticket return after Election Day, then the story will be quite different.

At Koumanovo, too, there was a hand to hand conflict with daggers. Pieces of Turk and Servian were scattered all over the sidewalks. These battles at close quarters are annoying the Street Cleaning Department

OCTOBER 29.—It was hinted today that the Turkish harem, if things continue unfavorable to the Turks, will be set loose with hatpins.

Here Are Some Smiles from Everywhere

Thought Fireworks Out of Place.

THE storm at sea was increasing and some of the deck fittings had already been swept overboard when the captain decided to send up a distress signal. The rocket was already lit and about to ascend when a solemn-faced passenger stepped up.

"Cap'n," said he, "I'd be the last man on earth to cast a damper on any man's patriotism, but seems to me this here's no time for celebratin' an' settin' off of fireworks."

Not the Horse for Him.

A GERMAN farmer was in search of a horse.

"I've got just the horse for you," said the liveryman. "He's five years old, sound as a dollar and goes ten miles without stopping."

The German threw his hands skyward. "Not for me," he said, "not for me. I live eight miles from town, und mit dot horse I haf to valk back two miles"

It Was Safe.

THE captain of a merchant vessel gave an Irish seaman his spyglass, of which he was very proud, and told him to clean it carefully. Pat met with an accident during the cleaning, and went to the captain, asking:

"Captain, will you tell me if a thing can be said to be lost when one knows where it is?"

"Lost when one knows where it is?" said the captain, "why, of course not. How foolish you are, Pat."

"Well, sor," said Pat; "thin yer spyglass is safe, for it's at the bottom of the sea."

How Blind Man Told Color.

"IS it true," ask Sallie, "that the blind can determine color by the sense of touch?"

"Sure," said Janes. "I once knew a blind man who could tell a red hot stove just by puffing his finger on it."

The Deacon Had Noticed.

"IT is all very well for people to criticise young ministers and talk of their inexperience," said the rich miserly man, "but I have nothing but praise for our pastor—nothing but praise."

"Yes," remarked the deacon who passed the plate, "so I've noticed."

Fussy.

"WHAT be these?"

"They are talking machines, you rube. Drop a nickel in the slot and the machine will talk to you."

"By heck, I'd do it if I thought I could git a civil answer."

Nervous.

"WHAT'S the matter with that friend of yours? He acts like a crazy man."

"He's all right, only you see he's from Central America and every time he hears a motorcycle he thinks a revolution has been started."

THINGS THAT HAVE ALWAYS PUZZLED US

No. 2

Copyright, 1912, by the Star Company Great Britain Rights Reserved.

IT would take a long time to tell all the things that have always puzzled us—even if we were immodest enough to do so

One of them is Henry VIII., late of England. That is, he is part of what has troubled us, the real puzzle has always been why eight beautiful women should fall for him!

Of course, when he married his brother's widow at eighteen, he was not so bad looking. But in later years Hen got careless, both of his own appearance and also of the heads of his old friends.

He was rather fat, had a reddish beard, thought he knew everything, was decidedly peevish, limped a little, and had a bad habit of ordering any one executed for any trifling offense.

And yet the women all "fell for him." In fact, poor Anne Boleyn and Catherine Howard lost their heads completely over him. (They never looked the same after their execution.)

Yet, after fussy and peevish old Henry had disrupted Rome, France and England trying to divorce his first wife, had executed his second wife, a third had died, Ann of Cleves had been divorced, and the next unfortunate beheaded, there was still a great rush to land him.

Catherine Parr landed him. She was said to be sensible, and poor Henry was sensible by that time Most men get sensible about the time they are old enough for an epitaph.

Women indeed have always puzzled us (and fooled us). Men may fool the women, but they never puzzle them. And that's another thing that puzzles us—why it is men never puzzle women?

And there are several other puzzles.

Why do subway guards and street car conductors shout "Garraxumphing Umpteralability!" when it is so much easier to say "Grand Central"?

Why do the writers of alleged stories and jokes and the makers of alleged humorous pictures, always make newsboys shout "Wuxtry"?

As a matter of fact, if a newsboy actually shouted Wuxtry" they'd have him examined as to his sanity.

The restaurants are something else again. Why, oh why is it that when you order anything, no matter what, and add "and a cup of coffee," the waiter or waiterine, as the sex may be, brings your order and then saunters away? You only get her back after frantic wig-wagging and remind her that you wanted coffee.

We are also puzzled over the manner in which the employers of certain popular restaurants bounce the dishes about. In our homes if we drop a plate on a soft rug or a velvet carpet it will promptly fall in nine pieces.

And yet, at these restaurants the employes take three pecks of assorted dishes, throw them violently into a cast iron trough, stir them up with a broom-handle, dump them into another trough, roll them around in a rumbler—and never so much as crack a dish.

There are other puzzles. For instance:

Why do laundries fill our shirts full of pins and the neckband full of jig-saw blades?

Why do some women disclose the family skeleton by wearing decollete gowns?

Why do men hog a seat in the cars because they are so tired and then stand up at a bar for three hours?

Why do men wear fuzzy hats?

Why doesn't the average man who insists on talking politics know something about it?

Why is it vulgar to eat peanuts in public but all right to gnaw corn off the cob in a big restaurant?

MONDAY—Harry tried sum ventrilokwism this morning and teacher punisht him for makeing faces.

We're studdying about Egypt. In Egypt they have a wooman that dont talk made outa stone and shes called the Sfinks. People come from all over the world to see this grate cureosity.

I dont think its so cureous. If she wasnt stone and dident talk it would then be cureous.

TUESDAY—Got a new boy in our class but we dont know much about him. Aint seen him fight yet.

Must write a compussition Why we go to school.

I'd like to know myself.

Pa says its to get a ajukation. Ma says she cant have me arround the house all day and i gota be sumware. Unkel Jim says its becawse theirs a lota teachers gota make a living.

A lota smart men work hard inventing a horseless carrege and a seadles orenje and even a fireles cooker, but noboddy ever invennts a schoolles ajukation so we must spend our best years in school lerning a lota thinks that aint nessesery.

Lerned sumthing to-day wasnt nessesery, exampels in ludjitood. We had to find out what time it is in Pariss when its 2 oclok here.

If I'm here I dont care what time it is in Pariss and if I'm in Pariss I can look at a clok and not make a lota boys in school work hard and find out for me.

WEDNESDAY—It says in our book history repeets itself. It dont in our class. Teacher makes us repeet it.

Teachers got a new kind of punishment. When we're bad we must write a lota lines from a book at home and bring it in the next day.

Me and Harry made little Robbie Crosby our sekretary and when we get punisht he writes for us.

Robbie can write good but he cant fight good so me and Harry fight for him in exchanje.

Robbies mother says hes a studeous boy, hes writing all the time.

Wish I was in high school and dident have to do compussitions only esays like Susie. A esay is a hard compussition wich you copy out of a book.

THURSDAY—Teacher read to us outa the papers about the Balkan war and the names was all jawbrakers. I'm glad i dont go to school in the Balkans. Looket the speling.

She said maybe Rusha will also take a part in it.

Then evryboddy will suffer hardships account of them Rushan names. It will be panefull even to talk about it.

Sang a patereotic song this morning The Starspangeld Banna. That means our flag in poetry.

The first line is got a sware in it, O say can you see by the darn offy light?

A poet can use such langwage wich aint aloud in other compussitions becaws he got a poettic lisens.

I know ware all the skiny people come from. A country called Afganistan wich our jeography says is thinnly peepled.

FRIDAY—The hardest word in our langwage teacher says is the word it. You bet. All the tuff exampels begin with it.

Last nights hoamwork had one. If 21 horses eat 9 tuns of hay in 4 weaks how long will it take 14 horses to eat twelve tuns?

Pa worked a long time then he said whats the use becaws their only imajinairy horses anyway. If he had the reel horses and reel hay he could find out pretty quick all right.

Harry made up a funy one. If a lota books give a lota boys a lota pane how long would it take one boy with one match to burn up the hole bizness?

He says the anser is so easy you dont have to look in a book.

All the coppy books in my row was spoilled to-day. Willie Barrett sneezed.

If your gona sneeze you aint got no right to eat chawklet.

Poetry Made Popular

Copyright, 1912, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved

THERE is one great peculiarity of songs. You probably know what it is, but you can't think of it right away.

To keep you from thinking too long and getting wrinkles in your alabaster brow, we will inform you of this peculiarity right away.

A real popular song, one of those that bring tears to the eyes of cowboys chasing the cattle along the ranges of Northeastern Idaho; tears to the eyes of remittance men in Calgary when the mail is a day late; tears to the eyes of ginks in Phuliofpeanut jungles when the Moro breaks the ice pitcher; in short, the songs that make all eyes brim with salty tears are those that begin with a question.

How many times have you heard weepy voices singing:

Should auld acquaintance be forgot
And never brought to mind?
Should auld acquaintance be forgot
And days of auld lang syne?

If this were not in the form of a question, not a tear would be dropped over it. Imagine trying to sing:

Auld acquaintance should nae (1) be forgot,
And often brought to mind.
Auld acquaintance should nae be forgot,
Ner days of auld lang syne.

(1) Nae is Scotch for nix, not, etc. Everybody knows that auld acquaintance shouldn't be forgotten, unless the auld acquaintance intends to make a touch.

Then, take another instance:

Oh, don't you remember sweet Alice, Ben Bolt,
Sweet Alice whose hair was so brown,
Who wept with delight when you gave her a smile,
And trembled with fear at your frown?

It seems quite unnecessary to ask a question like this. Without knowing Ben Bolt we think it impossible that any man, no matter how great a blockhead could ever forget a girl such as the one described.

Imagine a husband coming back from a day's work in his office. As he enters the house, he smiles. Instantly the missus bursts into a flood of tears, she is so overcome with delight at his smile. Before she can overcome the fit of weeping, the dinner is cold.

Next day hubby comes home with a slight frown upon his features.

The missus is so overcome with fear that she falls all of a trumble and drops the dishes she is carrying.

No, we don't believe Ben Bolt could ever quite forget such a girl.

There's another Alice:

The birds sleeping gently,
Sweet Lyra gleameth bright,
Her rays urge the forest.
And all seems glad to-night.
The winds sighing by me,
Cooling my fevered brows
The stream flows as ever,
Yet, Alice, where art thou?

Without definite knowledge, we assert that Alice was home in bed, like a sensible girl; not roaming about in a forest badly lighted by one star.

THE Pujo Money Probe Committee is in possession of statistics to the effect that John D. Rockefeller and J. P. Morgan control $39,711,328,878. If we controlled that we'd buy a dozen fresh eggs, a ton of coal, a sirloin steak and a fuzzy hat.

P. S.—We'd buy the fuzzy hat just to show people we could afford to spend money foolishly.

Some society women are said to be wearing hosiery that costs $200 a pair. In many instances this is a great deal like putting the works of a dollar watch in a solid gold case.

These so-called affinities are marvellous beings. Now it is said that a girl who stuck by a man accused of murdering his wife has deserted him because he was arrested on the charge of counterfeiting. You've got to make real money if you want to hold 'em these days.

A Haledon (N. J.) clergyman was granted permission to spend a night in a Paterson (N. J.) jail. Being in Paterson he probably felt safer in jail.

Surgeons saved a New York man's life by injecting horse blood in his veins. Now he'll probably want oatmeal three times a day.

The "Christy Mathewson" chrysanthemum is the newest flower. Why not a "Snodgrass cowslip"?

A New Jersey party is to feature the "Mosquito Gavotte" at a dance and introduce a lot of mosquitoes during this number. No doubt that dance will be quite up to the scratch.

A fashion note says "Men are taking to the kimono." No doubt there's something in it.

Harvard students, who introduced the tortoise-shelled glasses in New England, are said to be peeved because the Mayor of Boston has taken to wearing them, and they are not going to wear them any more. Very well, only remember, His Honor also wears trousers.

A New Jersey widow became fearfully angry when she learned that her daughter had eloped and married the same as she, the mamma, did. What's sauce for the gander is also some dessert for the gosling.

Manager Weiss, of Beaver Brook, Pa., came into New York the other day and took in the bright lights along Broadway. He is 109 years old, but he enjoyed it. Scientists have yet to learn the age limit for such things. And yet a lot of us blow into Broadway and feel more than 109 the next morning.

And speaking of age, out in Chicago a carpenter died last week at the early age of 116. Much capital was made at first by temperance people over the fact that he didn't smoke or drink. But later it was learned he didn't climb on the water wagon until he was eighty, nor did he give up tobacco until he was 105. If he had never used them at all he might have attained a ripe old age.

Professor Patten, of the University of Pennsylvania, believes that people would live much longer if they would do as the ancients do, go to the mountain tops and other high and dry places to live.

Who wants to live anyway, if this place is dry?

A bride of ten minutes is asking for a divorce. The husband better give it to her. She'll be asking for a lot more expensive things than that if he doesn't.

An Ode to MAME

By Ralph Stanley.

MAME BROWN works down at the ten-cent store,
At the necktie counter, near the door,
On the Main street side—her boss is wise,
He puts her there 'cause passin' guys
Looks in, sees Mame, an' needs necktie.

There's class to Mame, believe me, boss!
Without that dame there'd be a loss
In the necktie business of the place.
There's something in her pretty face
That starts a reg'lar necktie race.

Yes, Mame's a blonde—born that way.
Wears it big, like a bale of hay.
An' shape! Say, boss, right there's a dame
Would make de Milo weep fer shame,
If they was dressed up just the same.

She's a lady, Mame; got lots of prule
Chews her gum sort a dignified
An' languid-like; never seems to rush
On bargain days er in a crush
Of shoppin' men a talkin' mush.

Mame works eight hours a day er more
Down at the five-an'-ten-cent store;
An' every night takes in a show
Er a five-cent dance, with a diff'rint beau
Each time. Believe me! Mame ain't slow.

Mame's doin' fine, draws four per week.
An', say! she's thrifty as a Greek.
With that there measly little four
She keeps the wolf a mile er more
From off her swell apartment door.

Her little weekly salary
Buys pitcher hats an' drapery
That'd put a queen's trousseau to shame.
Not many a counter-jumpin' dame
C'n make her pay stretch out like Mame.

There's some girls down at the ten-cent store
That envies Mame, but a hull lot more
That pities her in their hearts; fer they
Are wise, y'u see, an' know the way,
An' the horror of stretchin' the weekly pay.

They say, down there at the ten-cent store,
Mame's job won't last a long time more.
She's goin' to quit for a handsome guy
Who comes around every day to buy
Enough neckties to supply the town.
An' tie up the heart of fair Mame Brown.

ANOTHER ELINOR GLYN NOVEL

Better than "WHY!"
Better than "THREE WEEKS!"

IT IS NAMED

"1905; Guinevere's Lover"

NO male novelist can show us the heart of a women in love, except as Kipling says: "Told from the outside, all wrong." But Elinor Glyn tells the story of Guinevere from the inside. Mrs. Glyn believes that woman is neither a success nor a failure, but merely an untried and unused product of the race until she marries. With marriage comes her real life and supreme test. Therefore the heroine, as in the author's other great successes, is a young matron. Love comes to Guinevere in its most dangerous form, and her defeat and victories are told in the unapproachable manner of Elinor Glyn.

KING AND DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH UNDER SAME ROOF

Are Fellow-Guests for the First Time Since George V. Ascended the Throne.

QUEEN NOT WITH HUSBAND

By CHESTER OVERTON.
Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, NOV. 8.—For the first time since he ascended the throne King George found himself last week at Elveden Hall, Lord Iveagh's country place, under the same roof as the Duchess of Marlborough. The Duchess's position, owing to Queen Mary's disapproval of "separated wives," has been difficult at court, but as the Queen is not accompanying the King on any of his shooting visits, the Duchess was, at his Majesty's request, particularly invited to Elveden.

Of course the King always has a list of guests he will meet at any country house selected for him but it is very significant, as showing the status of the Duchess in the intimacy of a house party.

King George's weakness for good shooting is known to the Rothschilds and by King Edward and they are quick to take advantage of it. Lionel Rothschild, the South African magnate, has extracted a promise from His Majesty to spend two days at Bentham for the shooting. Queen Mary will accompany the King on other and more sporty visits to the country houses. The Dukes of Devonshire and Portland will both entertain the King and Queen at Chatsworth and Welbeck respectively. At Welbeck great preparations are already being made and there will be a change in the famous underground billiard room, built by his late eccentric Duke.

The Earl of Derby and the Marquis of Salisbury will also be hosts of the King and Queen later. These visits entail great expense to the hosts, but, fortunately, all of these nobles can well afford it.

DECORATED PIGS' TAILS.

New Butler Is Wanted at Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's House.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—A new butler is wanted at Mrs. Alfred Gwynn Vanderbilt's country house, The Sirocco, at Betchworth, near Reigate, Surrey. The last butler left his job because he had to wear a red waistcoat, a blue tail coat, buff breeches and a powdered wig.

Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt.

When she first came to live at The Sirocco Mrs. M'Kim, to whom there was had a Swiss butler who had full charge of the household. Mrs M'Kim left for India. A new butler was engaged by Mrs. Vanderbilt, but when her modest footmen were added to the Vanderbilt retinue, the butler thought the time had come to quit. He took along with him the pigtail powder puff, a powder puff for the pigtail, a small fine ribbon for the pigtail, a cocked hat and a big red plush waistcoat.

When the bills came in the reckoning came also and explanations were sought by Mrs Vanderbilt. He was hurt at her lack of confidence and some of his answers proved decidedly caustic.

So Mrs. Vanderbilt intimated that he had better return to his father's home in the States, where he had brought

WOMEN SMOKE IN PUBLIC.

Cigarette Puffing Among Middle Classes Increases.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Cigarette smoking among English women of the middle classes is on the increase.

Not only does the ultra fashionable woman smoke in public and in her own home, but her example is followed by a large proportion of the middle class of women.

A correspondent gives an instance of this by showing that women now smoke in public with the utmost impunity.

"I was recently traveling north," he writes, "and used to notice with pain the haughty air I assume at the table when a woman, either of some refinement, and I learned to light my cigar after the meal.

"To my great surprise I never, shortly afterward, produced a cigarette case and began to smoke. I then noticed that all the ladies were smoking in the third class carriage and were also smoking."

GERMANY PLANS AERO MAIL

Asks Denmark to Join in Route Between Two Nations.

BERLIN, Nov. 9.—What may be interpreted merely as a warning in connection with aerial warfare is the effort of the German postoffice to establish an aerial mail route between Germany and Denmark.

It is understood that Germany has approached the Danish government with the view of establishing without delay a regular aerial passenger and freight service for the transportation of the mail across the Baltic. In connection with the German proposal, which contemplates a small subsidy which would be devoted to the construction and care of the aerial mail airship station on the Island of Amager, near Copenhagen.

Denmark has consented as viewing the project with great interest.

AMERICAN RUNS CONCERTS.

Only S. B. Schlesinger's Own Compositions Are Played.

PARIS, Nov. 9.—Sebastian B. Schlesinger formerly Boston banker and veteran musical composer, has started a series of popular concerts with singular success. At the opening concert, just given, the vast Salon des Agriculteurs was crowded. None but Mr. Schlesinger's own compositions, with vocal and instrumental, were given.

Mr. Schlesinger writes music for the voice, violin cello, harp and piano. He has been composing here for the last thirty years and has won for himself the sobriquet "Master of Melody." His daughter, Madame Trabilcotti, formerly Baroness Steinitz, and Miss Bertha Schlesinger, are similarly musical.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—What does Queen Mary spend on clothes?

Queen Mary is not an liberal a customer to the most stylish and noblest who have the honor of royal patronage as was Queen Alexandra.

As Princess of Wales her expenditure on dress was extremely low. She and her husband did not entertain upon a large scale, but lived comparatively quiet. Hence her orders to her modistes and milliners were neither lavish nor frequent.

Though she spends much more on dress now than she did as Princess of Wales she still spends less than the consort of any other great European power. The principles of strict economy instilled into her by her mother are not easily forgotten.

It is not that she is not always attired to become a Queen, but she makes her dresses last longer than her modistes like. Moreover, she does not leave the scrutiny of her bills to others. She goes through them all with her chief dresser, Mrs. Clerk (she is a well trained modiste and thoroughly familiar with the profits of the great dressmakers. The result is that the overcharges which formerly made the royal custom so profitable have become things of the past.

What She Pays for Gowns.

Queen Mary buys between forty and fifty gowns in a year. For her morning gowns she seldom pays more than $125. Her evening gowns rarely cost more than $500. She wears a morning gown frequently a couple of dozen times before it is put out of the wardrobes and an evening gown about a dozen times. There are ladies of the royal household who never wear an evening gown more than three times, and frequently but once.

The Queen owns to to her exceedingly clever chief dresser that she is able to make her gowns last so long. Mrs. Clerk can alter a gown so deftly that it will look like a new creation.

Queen Mary's expenditure on gowns alone rarely exceeds $4,000 in the year. This is at least a thousand dollars than the sum annually spent on dresses by Queen of Spain, the Queen Regent of Holland, Queen Alexandra and the Queen of Italy.

Queen Mary is fond of dress and of making dresses and a fancy ever wears the same sort of costume which she is in Dark Cottage or Balmoral. For instance, she pays $75 for a tailor made suit in bill for two walking costumes, one of blue serge and the other of Scotch tweed, charged at $45 each, was promptly paid, but he lost the royal custom.

Here are the sort of prices paid by Queen Mary for some of her gowns while King George came to the throne.

A short gown for afternoon wear.....$60

A negligee gown, tunic dress and cuffs..... 50

Silk crepon embroidered with guipure to match; transparent vest of blouse, lined throughout with best silk..... 90

Gown made in crevette colored crepon, draped over gold tissue (top of corsage finished with some of Her Majesty's own old Irish lace)..... 125

Prefers "Clean" Colors.

One point worth noting about the Queen's taste is that she never wears any material that is in the least "muddy" in color, such, for example, as many shades of red and yellow. Any material worn by her is always "clean" in color and of trade sense of the word.

On hats she spends less than $1,000 a year. She does not buy more than half a dozen really expensive hats in the year. Those may cost from $50 to $75 each. She has paid $100 for a hat, but not often. Open toque is a very favorite model for her suits. She recently had a couple hats of open tags, elaborately trimmed, for which she paid $30 each. She keeps two dozen hats in regular wear and buys about the same number in the year.

Stage Beauties in War for Suffrage

Members of the Actresses' Franchise League Ready to Strike Any Blow for Cause.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—Many lovely and talented women will adorn the stage of a militant cause the militant banner this year. Cry of "Votes for Women!"

The Actresses' Franchise League gave a reception at the Criterion Theatre the other day. Miss Marie Tempest was the chief hostess and in the assembly were some three hundred shining lights of the theatre—suffragettes all. Among them were Miss Eva Moore, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Miss Christine Silver, Miss Lena Ashwell, Miss Alice Crawford, Miss Adeline Bourne and Miss Sara Rideal.

Miss Alice Crawford is one of the most beautiful and famous women on the English stage, she is well known and has been much applauded in America. Her histrionic ability has been best displayed perhaps as the heroine in some of Ibsen's tragedies.

Miss Decima Moore has expressed her firm opinion that a man who does not keep up with the times and does not read the news has not half the right to vote that I have."

Miss Moore made her first appearance in "The Gondoliers" at the Savoy in 1890 and rose quickly in her profession. She is a sister of Miss Eva Moore, who is Mrs. H. V. Esmond in private life. Esmond, a happy playwright and father, says:

"If my wife wishes to vote, why should I interfere? I try to further her wishes and aspirations, which, if not without saying, are all admirable."

Miss Adeline Bourne is well known in America for her fine acting. Her husband, Lewis Nethersole, with whom no friendly relations were not too happy. Together impersonated the merciless nurse in Forbes Robertson's performance of "Oscar and Cleopatra."

How Do YOU Make YOUR Mince Pies?

$25 in Prizes for the Best Recipes Sent In

DR. HARVEY WILEY—the country's great Pure Food expert—came to town the other day and allowed that MINCE PIE was an important and indispensable part of the Thanksgiving dinner.

Dr. Woods-Hutchinson, the great expert on nutrition, digestion, and accordingly another pure food expert, but who unfortunately disagrees with Doctor Wiley on most every subject under the sun, declares that no Thanksgiving dinner is complete without mince pie.

Miss Delia Torrey, President Taft's "Aunt Delia," and a dear New England lady, in prescribing for the inner man for Thanksgiving Day gives her opinion that PIE is the most important part of the holiday dinner and that MINCE pie is her preference.

Well, well, people. HOW do you make this MINCE PIE that seems so popular?

If Mince Pie is so important as all this we would like to know more about HOW TO MAKE THE BEST MINCE PIE.

There are probably MORE ways to make mince pies than any other kind.

The Sunday AMERICAN therefore will afford to the women of New England an opportunity to tell their less enlightened friends and neighbors how and of what ingredients to make mince pies.

Just to stimulate interest in the inquiry the Sunday AMERICAN will pay $25 in prizes for the BEST recipes.

The awards will be made in the Sunday AMERICAN of November 24, so you may all have the BEST RECIPES for your Thanksgiving cooking and the WINNERS will have their prizes to provide them with entertainment on the holiday.

How do YOU make YOUR mince pies?

"Aunt Delia" Says PIE Is Most Important Part of Thanksgiving Dinner

IN the estimation of Miss Delia C. Torrey, President Taft's "Aunt Delia," PIE is the most important part of the Thanksgiving dinner.

She prefers mince pie, too.

In talking over the proper way to celebrate Thanksgiving the other day, she said that her idea of a Thanksgiving dinner is this:

Beef Soup.
Chicken Pie.
Roast Turkey, Cranberry Sauce.
Lettuce and Tomato Salad.
PIE.
Ice Cream.

Fruits. Nuts. Raisins.
Tea or Coffee.
Old-Fashioned Cream Peppermints.

"My notion," says this dear old New England lady, "is that the Thanksgiving dinner should begin with appetizing beef soup, and then there should be a fat roast turkey, or two turkeys, according to the size of the company, provided turkeys are not thirty cents a pound.

"Then there are the cranberry sauce, a real New England brand of chicken pie, a tomato and lettuce salad, and pie with a capital P. As to whether apple or mince is preferable, I personally think mince is the correct brand for Thanksgiving, because, you see, you can make better mince pies than apple pies, though people don't seem to know it.

"And after the pie with capital letters, we should have ice cream, fruit, nuts and raisins, tea or coffee, and you mustn't forget the old-fashioned cream peppermints. No typical New England Thanksgiving feast is complete without cream peppermints."

Mince Pies of Today Not Like Those Mother Used to Make, Says Dr. Wiley

Food Expert Tells Us What to Eat

Pure food experts have had a lot to say during the past year about poisonous and adulterated foods. But here is a pure food expert who tells us just about what we want to know.

He tells us what we should eat and what he eats himself.

By ALFRED W. McCANN,
Member of the Vigilance Committee of the Associated Advertising Club of America.

DO you know that the noblest American institution, measured by the fruits of its work, is the Italian fruit vendor, who offers to miserably starving bodies a temptation to pluck the fruit? Bananas, ripe nuts, oh, more green than ripe, oranges, lemons, dates, figs, pomegranates, pineapples, grape fruit, grapes of every kind.

Dr. Goodale of Philadelphia and I went out the other night and bought magnificent grapes cheaply in Boston. We got Malaga grapes and Muscatels and Concords. You have wondered at the grapes here in Winter, in the season, and fruits of every kind all the year round; berries for children, raspberries, blackberries, strawberries, melons of every kind, always ripe.

We ought to eat greens, all of us, even if we have to eat grass. Eat them raw, that is the best way, with some pure oil on them, and lemon juice or good vinegar—if you want to hang to vinegar. Eat greens, lettuce, salads of every kind, spinach. And you should cook them how? Don't pour the water in which you cook them down the waste pipe. The minute, little gritty specks are in the greens, and when you pour the water out you pour those substances out, because a large part of them has gone into the water. We give our babies at home that water to drink. We make the most delicious of soups, cheap soups, penny soups.

Should Eat Vegetables.

We should eat every vegetable in season, and they are in season all the time, some half dozen of them are ready for us every week. And the grains—how much better off we would be if we saw to it that we did get an honest loaf of bread made from the grain. Then honey—that's a natural sweet. The sap of the maple tree is another natural sweet. Granulated sugar is not a natural sweet, for the reason that it has been denaturized.

What do I eat? Everything in nature! Even occasionally I go so far as to eat a piece of rare steak.

We do not like to be told that we ought not to eat meat, and I propose to tell you that you ought not to eat it. But how do you know that the meat which you eat is not tuberculous? In the States of New York and New Jersey—I am familiar with the conditions there; I don't know about them in Massachusetts—50 per cent of the milk-producing cows are tuberculous, and they naturally produce tuberculous milk. These cows are fed how? Well, in the breweries they produce a by-product which is called brewers' grain—the minerals in that gone out, the solubles have gone out, the iron, the phosphorus and potassium and manganese and magnesium and calcium, etc. And what happens? The cow fed on that chemically denaturalized by-product gets tuberculosis, and you can't help it.

You can automatically produce tuberculosis in a hogpe by giving him the food that you give to the cow to produce your milk, and you can automatically produce tuberculosis in a human being in the same way. If you can take a half-starved body and cure that body of tuberculosis with the right food, why not use the right food in the first place and not get the tuberculosis?

The Tubercular Bacilli.

It has been discovered that the lung tissue of a tuberculous victim gave an alkaline reaction to litmus paper in the laboratory; the lung tissue of a healthy man gives an acid reaction to the litmus paper. Now, that acid is the result of the phosphates fat in the lung tissues. In the presence of that acid tissue the tubercular bacilli die. They are destroyed. The tubercular bacilli is a good thing; it belongs in the proper place. When it gets into our body it takes root in the alkaline tissues and feeds, but if we obey the laws of nature and the tissues contain the phosphoric acid—phosphorus in some form or combination—these germs are destroyed, and we can says to tuberculosis, "Good bye; what do you say about you? You are all right in nature; you do your work and I will do mine, and we will not bother each other."

But the phosphorus is taken out of our foods. At home when you cook vegetables and throw away your water, when you eat your denaturalized grains, the tissues are ready for the ravages and then the tubercular bacilli come they take hold and grow, and then we have the results. There is a perfectly simple proposition, and the child can be taught it with those chickens in those cages and these chickens in these cages.

The bacon and the pea and the lentil are good food. There are a dozen different kinds of beans, all kinds of domestic and imported beans. Beans are beef. But how do you cook them? In Boston you use molasses containing sulphurous acid to cook them with, and sulphurous acid plays the part of a preventative of oxidation. The reason sulphurous acid is used in dried fruits and acids and antiurs wine is because it bleaches them out, it prevents them from becoming oxidized, and when things oxidize they discolor. Now, it plays that part in the molasses barrel, it also plays that part in the human body. Sulphurous acid enters the human body in the form of sulphites in candy, SO2 you will see it on the can of molasses—or it says it contains sulphur dioxide; if you look at the label you will see that.

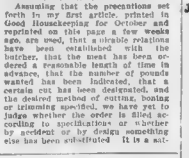
That substance plays the same part in the body as it plays in that can. It stops the processes of oxidation in the body, that's why it doesn't belong there.

How You May Recognize Good Meat And Get Quality for the Least Money

By LOUIS D. HALL
Author of "Market Classes and Grades of Meats" and Contributing Editor of Good Housekeeping Magazine.

SATISFACTION in buying meat depends in large measure upon the skill of the purchaser in discriminating between the choice, medium, common and inferior grades, and in taking advantage of divergencies that exist between market prices and food values of many of the cuts. A time may come in the Utopian future when, as some have suggested, governments will regulate and brand the quality as well as the purity of our food products. But so long as conditions of production vary, just so long will various grades of product be found in the market, and marketing remain largely a matter of individual education.

Assuming that the precautions set forth in my last article, printed in Good Housekeeping for October and reprinted on this page a few weeks ago, are used, that a sensible relations have been established with the butcher, that the meat has been ordered a reasonable length of time in advance, that the number of pounds wanted has been indicated, that a certain cut has been designated, and the desired method of cutting, boning or trimming specified, we have yet to judge whether the order is filled according to specifications or whether by accident or by design something else has been substituted. It is a satisfaction and a saving to know this with reasonable certainty before the cut is cooked, avoiding a possible waste of energy, fuel, time and patience. Let us, therefore, consider systematically the indications of excellence in a piece of meat.



STANDING RIB ROAST.

The cut may be roasted as it is, or made into a short rib roast by the cutting of the end at the right; or the bone removed and the meat rolled up.

In order to satisfy the average person, meat must possess three general characteristics: it must be palatable, nutritious and economical. The relative importance of these points varies a good deal in the estimation of different people and of the same person at different times. To those who are not hampered by financial limitations and to some of the rest of us once in a while—the minerals in the meat are of the first thought; and cost is a consideration that most of us have constantly to count with more or less care.

To be palatable, meat has to be sound and sweet, of proper color, pleasing in general appearance, tender and well flavored. Nutritive value depends chiefly upon juiciness and the degree of fatness of the cut. The relative economy of different kinds and cuts of meat is determined by the ratio of their market prices to the food ingredients, weight in cooking and, furthermore, if properly cooked, may be made practically as tender.

Although no infallible rule can be stated that will certainly indicate whether a given cut will turn out tender when cooked, nevertheless careful observation will assist greatly in making a good guess. Look for fine, smooth grain or fiber, little connective tissue, a covering of flesh in front and such consistency that the flesh may be penetrated with the finger or easily cut with a knife, first from in condition rather than soft and flabby. With some exceptions, the fatness of the meat and the degree of "marbling," or distribution of fat throughout the lean, are indications of tenderness; and a light color shows, usually, that the cut is from a young animal and should be tender.

Whether meat is cut with the grain, or across it, makes much difference in its apparent fineness or coarseness of fiber, and this must be considered in judging of tenderness. Even the tenderloin of beef or of pork looks stringy when cut lengthwise, and the flank steak still more so. Lean meat is made up of elongated cells of muscular tissue, bound into small bundles by a thin white membrane called connective tissue. The more of this connective tissue, the tougher the meat fortunately, however it is susceptible to softening by heat, which changes it to gelatin; so that, within certain limits, it is under the control of the cook. By adequate treatment, such as tireless cooking, the natural toughness of cuts from those parts that have much connective tissue.

Another indication of the degree of tenderness in meat is the texture and color of bone. Comparatively soft, spongy and reddish-colored bone indicate that the cut is from a young animal, while hard, dense, white bones are characteristic of old ages. The "blush joint," or "break joint," found on the legs or shanks of lambs is a good illustration of this point. In breaking joints the foot is broken off at a sharp, or false joint rather than at the angle, while in sheep this suture is left or omitted and the foot must be removed at the round joint.

Next to tenderness, the greatest satisfaction in eating meat, regardless of the kind, depends upon the juiciness and flavor of the fat, stringy meat is neither palatable, nutritious nor economical; while a juicy meat is an assurance that makes meat juicy; the cell walls will rather than evaporate it strongly. There is a decided difference, too, between meat of a juicy nature and that which is merely watery. The former, as developed in prime beef or mutton of normal age, retains its substance and shape in cooking, while the latter, as in veal, shrinks heavily, due to the loss of water, leaving it comparatively dry and tasteless.

Flavor is closely associated with the juiciness of meat. As just indicated, it develops with the growth of the animal, and is therefore most pronounced in mature fat cuttings. Veal and lamb cuts are deficient in flavoring material as compared with beef and mutton. Generally, the "heavier the hogs the sweeter the meat," and the cheaper cuts from pigs that are exercised most are equal or superior in point of flavor to those carefully avoided. Although not necessarily dangerous it is at best repulsive and unwholesome.

ROLLED RIB ROAST.

In this cut the bone has been removed and the cut rolled and tied. This piece of meat is easier to cook than the standing rib, but losing somewhat in flavor.

Judging the Color.

Perhaps the first characteristic that catches the eye is the color of the steak or chop under consideration. Good beef, when first cut, is a rich, bluish red, which turns bright cherry or pale red when exposed a few minutes. The blue or purplish shade frequently remains until the steak is unwrapped in the kitchen, and is not, as is sometimes suspected, an indication of poor or old meat. It usually varies from almost white to light red but should be a dull pink to be at its best. Lamb cuts range from light pink to grayish red, according to the age and quality of the lamb; and mutton is a dull brick red. Pork from young pigs is nearly white and that from older animals is dull pink or rose color. The fat of all meat should be as nearly white as possible, free from clots and spots, and of a firm, clear consistency.

Dark-colored flesh, in general, is characteristic of older animals; it is usually more pronounced in males than in females. Generally, therefore, it is not of the best grade. But to be not deceived by color, for it sometimes "happens," is violation of the pure food regulations, that meat were an artificial complexion, purchased at the drug store. Occasionally, too, a cut that is abnormally dark in color proves to be all one can desire as to its "eating qualities." The latter statement applies especially to the outer fat, which, in beef cuts, is sometimes quite yellow, due to drink and smoked meats, some of which can be improved only by tasting.

Now a few words which will serve to guide the reader to recognize the general appearance of good beef.

Besides soundness and proper color, a tempting appearance in meat requires good shape—full, thick and plump according to the kind of cut even, smoothly cut surfaces. Firm condition, and absence of all indications of coarseness in the flesh and bone. Words can scarcely describe that subtle something called general quality; it must be impressed by actual observation of the details we are attempting to define; by careful attention, for example, to the size and shape of the cut, of a sirloin, the amount, character and color of bone, as well as meat in a pork chop, the smoothness and quality of rind on a strip of breakfast bacon

Signs of Tenderness

Toughness is the shortcoming that causes more complaints than any other characteristic of our daily meat; so much, indeed, that more essential points are usually sacrificed to overcome it. For instance, veal is in color a not demand even at high prices, merely because it is naturally tender; whereas mature beef is much more nutritious, has a decidedly richer flavor, loses less weight in cooking and furthermore, if properly cooked, may be made practically as tender.

Although no infallible rule can be stated that will certainly indicate whether a given cut will turn out tender when cooked, nevertheless careful observation will assist greatly in making a good guess. Look for fine, smooth grain or fiber, little connective tissue, a covering of flesh in front and such consistency that the flesh may be penetrated with the finger or easily cut with a knife, first from in condition rather than soft and flabby. With some exceptions, the fatness of the meat and the degree of "marbling," or distribution of fat throughout the lean, are indications of tenderness; and a light color shows, usually, that the cut is from a young animal and should be tender.

Whether meat is cut with the grain, or across it, makes much difference in its apparent fineness or coarseness of fiber, and this must be considered in judging of tenderness. Even the tenderloin of beef or of pork looks stringy when cut lengthwise, and the flank steak still more so. Lean meat is made up of elongated cells of muscular tissue, bound into small bundles by a thin white membrane called connective tissue. The more of this connective tissue, the tougher the meat fortunately, however it is susceptible to softening by heat, which changes it to gelatin; so that, within certain limits, it is under the control of the cook. By adequate treatment, such as tireless cooking, the natural toughness of cuts from those parts that have much connective tissue.

Another indication of the degree of tenderness in meat is the texture and color of bone. Comparatively soft, spongy and reddish-colored bone indicate that the cut is from a young animal, while hard, dense, white bones are characteristic of old ages. The "blush joint," or "break joint," found on the legs or shanks of lambs is a good illustration of this point. In breaking joints the foot is broken off at a sharp, or false joint rather than at the angle, while in sheep this suture is left or omitted and the foot must be removed at the round joint.

Next to tenderness, the greatest satisfaction in eating meat, regardless of the kind, depends upon the juiciness and flavor of the fat, stringy meat is neither palatable, nutritious nor economical; while a juicy meat is an assurance that makes meat juicy; the cell walls will rather than evaporate it strongly. There is a decided difference, too, between meat of a juicy nature and that which is merely watery. The former, as developed in prime beef or mutton of normal age, retains its substance and shape in cooking, while the latter, as in veal, shrinks heavily, due to the loss of water, leaving it comparatively dry and tasteless.

Flavor is closely associated with the juiciness of meat. As just indicated, it develops with the growth of the animal, and is therefore most pronounced in mature fat cuttings. Veal and lamb cuts are deficient in flavoring material as compared with beef and mutton. Generally, the "heavier the hogs the sweeter the meat," and the cheaper cuts from pigs that are exercised most are equal or superior in point of flavor to those

ROUND STEAK.

The part above the line is known as the "sender" or "top," and is decidedly more tender than the lower half from the more tender parts along the back.

Well marbled meat has a distinctive flavor, due to the rich taste which the intermingled fat gives to the lean. Such meat is also more susceptible to broiling or to other methods of cooking than very lean or watery cuts. In cured meats, particularly sugar-cured ham and bacon, the so-called general quality is a large figure, and much depends upon the methods and materials used in curing and smoking. Being generally sold under brand names, the purchaser has a fairly good guide in the selection of a desired flavor in such meats it is true that few commercially cured meats are equal, and none superior, in palatability to the genuine farm cured article at its best, but the latter in these days is almost extinct.

Although meat is used primarily for the sake of the protein, or lean, that it provides, the purchaser makes a serious mistake who objects to the so-called "waste fat" that adorns and protects the more economical lean cuts in order to avoid it. In the first place, the best quality of lean meat requires a sufficient outer layer of fat to give it good keeping qualities and a slightly superior acid at least a moderate "marbling" of the cut to make it rich and tender. A roast, steak or leg of good size should carry, usually, one-fourth to one-half inch of outside fat, and other cuts may have more or less, according to their class and size. Slices of fat will turn out more tender bacon would find the thicker, fatter grades equally palatable and cheaper.

In the second place, fat in two and one-fourth inches of cut from an energy standpoint as lean, and although a limited amount of it is indigestible in direct use, the remainder need not be wasted, but may be utilized in such forms as roasting drippings, for which it is as good, or better, than butter. Finally proper cooking, including the process of roasting, is impossible with extremely lean meat, and the percentage of shrinkage in cooking is high. If, from choice or for economy's sake, lean steak is ordered, it is well to serve with a piece of suet so that it may be made savory and served with it or own gravy. The trouble is that our fancied economy is false; we would better save by selecting a cheaper piece of cut, but looking well to its quality.

EGG-LAYING RECORD MADE IN CONTEST

Remarkable Results in Year's Test at Connecticut Agricultural College.

254 IS THE WORK OF A RED

WHILE a Rhode Island red hen carried off the honors in the Storrs Agricultural College contest, the tests with various breeds proved once more that it is the strain and not the variety that makes egg-laying records.

The Connecticut contest has come to a close after running twelve months. A second test was immediately begun.

The winners in the contest are the White Leghorn pen of F. G. Yost of Sayre, Pa., and the White Wyandotte pen of Beulah Farm of Stony Creek, Ont. The records are:

F. G. Yost, total eggs..... 3,071
Beulah Farm, total eggs..... 1,000

The records of some of the other leading breeds are: Barred Rocks, 925; White Rocks, 901; Columbian Wyandottes, 891; S. C. Rhode Island Reds, 930; Brown Leghorns, 907; Buff Orpingtons, 860; White Orpingtons, 858. The R. C. Rhode Island Reds gain third place.

The Leader's Record In the Contest.

The highest-scoring individual was bird No. 4, a Rhode Island Red, entered by Mrs. Harris Lehman, Midway, Ky. This splendid layer made the remarkable score of 256 eggs, her record for scoring as follows: No. 1, 50; No. 2, 170; No. 3, 142; No. 5, 140. The greatest difference between the individual and total score is due to the number of eggs laid outside the trap nests. Mrs. Lehman will undoubtedly breed No. 4 back to his sire, in order to indelibly fix the egg-laying propensity of this individual in the creation of a new strain of heavy layers, and herein lies the value of the competition in one respect at least.

High scoring individuals were not rare approximately fifty birds laying over 200 eggs in the year. One pen, White Rocks, W. J. Tilley, laid thirty-five eggs in seven consecutive days, but these seven days were not embraced in the official record.

Other remarkable performances were made by individuals and pens, proving that house, food and care make a difference in egg production if the foundation of the strain is properly constructed.

The laying of the English pen cannot pass without comment. With only four hens, the average per bird is much higher than that of the winning pen. Mr. Barron sends another pen for the second contest feeling that nothing but the death of one or more birds can cut down the total score.

Better birds are entered by the old contestants in the second competition, and therefore it is reasonable to expect better yields.

The same houses and grounds will be used in the second competition that were used in the first. The houses are 12x12. Divided by a partition, giving each pen seventy-two square feet of floor space. East and west windows permit sunlight in each pen that part of the day when it is not shining in the south front.

Yards 24x40 for range are sown to screen food for the fowls, consisting of rape, oats, mangel, in the substitute for Winter use. Dry mash is fed in flat pans and grain in quantities for the hoppers, these hoppers providing exercise at the same time. Drinking vessels, dust boxes, roost boards and trap nests, five of them, are furnished each pen. These trap nests are the invention of Professor Graham, operating in a simple manner and allowing easy ingress by the hen, the act of entering causing them to close by gravity, automatically.

Results of the Egg-Laying Contest.

The United States alone, with nearly 20,000,000 consumer hens, produces 30,000,000,000 eggs each year at an average sale price of 20 cents per dozen. An increase of one, two or ten eggs for each hen runs into many figures when figured for proof of the statement that competitions are necessary.

Truly, the legacy left by last year's layers is one to be proud of; 79,230 eggs were sold by the pens and cages of layers of 1911. The average each brought during the 12 months was only ninety-eight pens actually competing, two having been unavoidably compelled to withdraw after the competition had started) into the total number laid. If deductions were made for pens with two, three or four layers, the average per hen would be higher. One pen laid 1,071, another 1,005, while one individual laid 254 eggs as her share of the total. Rarely are authenticated records made equaling the performance of the flock average compared with so-called commercial averages, the average for this year's work and that when with other competitions; in fact, exceeding them in the United States.

The matter of type in the different breeds and varieties does not seem to influence egg production so much as type of the individual. That this matter of type has its limitations and peculiarities is evident; many high-scoring layers in each variety differ considerably in physical characteristics, and just there condition of feed, housing, care, heredity and proper mating step in.

CYRUS MILLER ON PRICES.

Offered $3 a Barrel for Apples; Commission Man Necessary.

My crop of Baldwins—about 3,000 barrels—I have been offered $2 a barrel for—including grain and second-which I have refused. "Apple Valley" growers, responding 3,000 barrels, sold for 42 per barrel and have good reason to be glad sold for that same price. Some of my client have received $2 50 for their No. 1's, those over two and one-half inches, and some have received $1 40 per bushel box.

You do not believe there is any combination among dealers, as a recent article suggests or intimates. The hard, cold facts are that the crop the country over, is large. The dealers realize it and are acting accordingly. I am not selling a bit more than I need for my fruit. I know that I have had good years. And if this is a bad year I know that next year will come around. The apple dealer—or commission man as he is usually called—is the most important and vital necessity in disposing of the country's apple crop as in handling all kinds of food product. His profits as a rule are not exorbitant or unreasonable.

In my opinion and judgment the fundamental cause for and of the high price of food products to the consumer is the large profits demanded by the average retailer. How this may be overcome I do not know, nor do I think anyone can can give any explanation except one purely theoretical. This season's experiences suggests many points whereby the apple industry might be placed upon a safer and surer basis, but that is another story.

Lauds American as Aid to Agriculture

George E. Stickney Wonders Why More Men in Cities Do Not Turn to Farming.

Editor Boston AMERICAN:

I cannot refrain from expressing my opinion upon the stand your paper is taking on the question that pertains to agriculture, more especially corn.

The time will come when attention upon good farming will command as much attention by the local newspapers as by the magazines especially providing for such work.

I congratulate you in being a pioneer in this line of work.

When a corn raiser can be educated to raise all of the food stuffs on the farm that are necessary to insure the proper feeding and care of his live stock, as well as a good share of his house commodities they he will be able to laugh at his nearby neighbor in the city, who is getting only $2 or $3 per day at the most, and possibly less, for his services.

My regular business has always taken me into the city, and I have often wondered why it was that so many able-bodied men should strive to eke out an existence on day laborer's pay, who, if they would go into the country districts for a means of sustenance they would be far better, have more sunshine, good air, outdoor work and more dollars in their pockets at the end of the year.

George E. Stickney, financier and farmer, is secretary-treasurer of the New England Corn Exposition, whose next show will be held at Horticultural Hall November 20 to 24, inclusive. Although he has been a banker all his life, Mr. Stickney is also a scientific farmer and a lecturer on the science of agriculture. He is a recognized authority on corn and a staunch advocate of New England corn.

RURAL MAIL-BAG

Rural Mail-Bag:

I have a two-acre orchard of good, rich, heavy land. Some of my neighbors tell me I ought to fertilize, but I have not seen any need of fertilizing yet. Is fertilizing necessary when land produces a good crop?

HILLINGS

This method that you describe is that which has gradually depleted the rich lands in the West, namely, that of drawing the plant food out of them year after year, without putting any back for them to transform and pass over to the plant. This treatment of the soil is what causes soil exhaustion. The history of the rich valley and upland farms of the West shows that soil cannot be drawn on continually without having their plant food content renewed. Sooner or later they will lose their strength. It would be better to apply a moderate amount of fertilizer to your orchard land annually, thus keeping up its strength.

Rural Mail-Bag:

Please give me a good receipe for a fertiliser for my orchard.

BEGINNER

Professor W. P. Brooks, director of the Experiment Station at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, gives the following receipe:

Bone, 500 to 800 pounds, low grade sulfate of potash 200 to 500 pounds; muriate of soda, 75 to 100 pounds.

Should high grade sulfate be used in place of the low grade, use but half as much. The proportion of these ingredients to be used will vary with the nature of the land. You will have to determine what for yourself, or get the advice of an expert who can see your land.

An ear of dent corn has from 800 to 1,000 kernels. There are raised in the United States annually approximately three billion bushels of corn.

If, by selection or breeding, or both, a strain of corn were developed which would produce just one more kernel to the ear than the average of the present varieties grown, and if this strain or variety were grown throughout the United States, it is possible that the yield of corn would be increased by three million bushels, worth one and one-half million dollars.

EVERY corn grower should have a well defined plan of selecting ears for exhibition and for seed the following year. By careful selection a strain can be improved in production from year to year, and at the same time adapted to the local soil and climatic conditions. A good variety or strain for one section may not be the best for another on account of differences in soil conditions.

There is an excellent opportunity, therefore, for a progressive corn grower to work up a strain adapted to his section, and to sell the seed to his neighbors at a good price.

The only satisfactory method of selecting seed corn is the one that takes into consideration the whole plant. Experiments conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture have demonstrated that important stalk characters, such as height of ear, character of root growth, quantity and width of foliage, number of suckers number of ears per stalk, etc., are transmitted in a marked degree. It is, therefore, necessary to select seed ears from stalks that are well developed, and this can be done only by selecting from growing stalks at ripening time.

Corn for the Exhibition.

When selecting corn for exhibition purposes the first and most important point is uniformity, that is, the ears should be as near alike as possible. The brush, the size of tip, number of rows, length of the ears, color, etc., should be uniform in all ears exhibited. Select fifty or a hundred of the best ears and lay them on a table, and from these pick out ten ears which are nearest alike, and which measure up to the standard of perfection which you have in mind.

When selecting ears for exhibition or for seed in the field, keep in mind the ideal or standard type, and pick many more ears than you require for either purpose. Time should not be taken in the field to see that each ear possesses all of the desirable characters mentioned above. The final selection should be made later.

To not include in your exhibit one ear that is an inch or more shorter than the others, nor one that is an inch longer. The ten ears should be all the same color, and the rows of kernels straight, and twisted in all the ears. It is best to exhibit ten ears all alike, even if they are not the best, than to include one ear very much better or worse. If an extra good ear is found, use it for a single ear exhibit.

Of the Flint type third, smooth oval grains, nearly as broad as long, with the horny starch surrounding the germ and softer starch; commonly eight rows to the ear:

Stickney's yellow, Longfellow flint, Eight-rowed yellow, Iron flint, Watsopee flint (white), Woodbridge's flint, Rhode Island white.

Of the dent type (grains long in proportion to breadth, and indented at the end, with the soft starch reaching through the horny starch to the top of the grain; sometimes runs as high as 36 rows to the ear):

Pride of the north,
Hunter's white (silage),
Brewer's dent,
Murdock's dent,
Hoff's yellow.

Farmers intending to try a variety new to their neighborhood ought to consult the extension department of their State Agricultural College, or their State experiment

OPPOSITION to the appropriation of money to fight the gypsy-moth and the brown-tail moth at times borders closely strong at both legislatures. The widespread prevalence of the pests is due indeed to the strength of the opposition to offer battle to the struggle [illegible] by Massachusetts at one time is unquestionably responsible for the establishment of the moth so firmly that more radical measures are now necessary to destroy it.

But the story of money lost by saving money does not end here. Last year the people of the United States decided that they would not permit insect pests and plant diseases to be carried from one State to another where they did not before exist. Congress passed a law empowering the Secretary of Agriculture to impose a quarantine against the shipment of products and material from one State to another when such shipment threatened to carry disease or pests.

Under this law a hearing has been held at Washington to determine whether shipment of timber and timber products from large territories in New England into other States shall not be prohibited. "The gypsy-moth," says the notice of the hearing, "is one of the most destructive insects whose attacks fruit, shade and forest trees. It is known to occur in limited areas in Maine, New Hampshire Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, and as huge a mass of the insect may be transported in forest trees, shrubs and greens, using them and parts of them or forest products such as posts, wood, lumber, telephone poles, railroad ties, etc., it is necessary that every possible means be taken to prevent distribution to other sections of the United States. In order to accomplish this it is proposed to establish a quarantine covering the districts now known to be infested with this insect."

A similar hearing was also held concerning the advisability of quarantining on account of the brown-tail moth.

The probabilities are strong that the quarantine will be established, and this shutting off of New England from outside markets for such forest products would simply be another settlement of New England economy in another way of wasting money.

IMMIGRANTS TEACH US.

NEARLY 700,000 immigrants, or almost 16 per cent. of the total immigration to the United States between 1901 and 1910, settled in New England. The cities and towns where immigrants sought the cities, the mill towns, and other non-rural places of employment. But nevertheless no large a number sought farms and farming districts that their influence on the agriculture of the section is important. In some respects these new-comers must be taught, but in other respects they are teaching us. Especially in this so in their determination to get the fact that New England farms are worth working and New England agriculture profitable.

To Forbid Airships in War

THE recent English army manoeuvres demonstrated again and again that airships would play a decisive part in future warfare, and that they could in a few hours destroy any city. During the manoeuvres the aeroplanes dropped sham bombs upon the city of Cambridge, which lay within the field of operations. These bombs, if charged with dynamite, would have made that ancient city a heap of burning ruins within five minutes.

This demonstration of the possibilities of the aeroplane was so terrible that even the English newspapers have demanded that the use of aerial vessels should be forbidden by international agreement. The reason for forbidding their use would be the appalling suffering they would inflict on non-combatants.

The aeroplane used in the English army manoeuvres was of the type known as "the short navy biplane." It has been furnished to ships in the British navy because it is small and easy to stow on shipboard.

The possibility of using these weapons against the United States is calling for serious consideration among army and navy experts. If a foreign fleet at war with this country and carrying these aeroplanes could get past our navy it would be able to reduce our seaboard cities to ruins within a surprisingly short space of time.

Washington, New York, Boston, all our great coast cities, might be blown to ashes in the course of a few hours, according to these experts.

Many recent improvements have been made in the use of aeroplanes and dirigible balloons for war purposes. At a meeting in Gotha large prizes were given to aeroplanists and balloon pilots who could drop bombs upon targets with accuracy. The results proved remarkable powers of destruction for the aerial weapons.

An aviator named Lindpaintner dropped seven bombs out of ten upon the target from a height of 800 feet while flying in an aeroplane. Other competitors showed almost equally good results. Prizes amounting to $100,000 were distributed among the flying men for proving their powers of scattering death and ruin.

A firm at Jena, Germany, has perfected an instrument which makes the aiming of bombs from an aeroplane comparatively simple. It consists of a telescope, a graduated scale and a dial. The pilot sights the target by the telescope and then lets the bomb drop by means of a lever. This sends the bomb automatically toward the target.

NEW DISCOVERIES ALL OVER THE EARTH

How CUT FLOWERS Continue to Make PERFUME

FLOWERS continue to manufacture perfume after they have been separated from the parent stem.

This is the latest remarkable discovery made by European investigators.

It has been the commonly received opinion that the moment the blossom is cut it begins to die and its creative power stops. This has been proved all wrong by some very careful investigations made in France and Germany. The chemists attached to establishments where the essential oil or odorous matter in flowers is extracted for the manufacture of perfumes have been studying this question for years, and at last the conclusions at which they have arrived are made public.

The experimenters took 200 pounds of flowers as the general basis of their experiments and applied the four methods known to the manufacturers for the extraction of the odorous material. These four methods are: Placing the blossoms on grease spread upon glass, the cold grease having an attraction for the odor of the flower and catching and holding it, thus forming what perfumers call pomade; maceration of the blossoms in hot grease, which also catches and holds the odor, another type of pomade; and the treatment with petroleum ether, which extracts the odor, and distillation of the blossoms in steam, catching the oil thus extracted from the steam when it has cooled and become water, laden with the oil from the flowers.

The cold process called technically "enfleurage" tends to preserve the life of certain flowers, notably jasmin and tuberose, and it was proved by actually weighing the odorous matter collected that from five to ten times as much odor was secured by the cold grease method which kept the blossom alive as from the petroleum process, which kills the blossom at once. This was proof positive that the blossom had continued to manufacture odor even after being cut, under favorable conditions tending to preserve the life and activity of the blossom. This was remarked in the case of jasmin and tuberose, but in the case of orange blossoms, used very extensively for the extraction of their delicate odor, the cold process did not produce nearly so well, the process of distillation by steam and the petroleum-ether process giving a far greater yield.

Two explanations of these facts may be offered. In the case of the jasmin and tuberose the cold grease, helping to keep them alive, stimulates the creation of odor five or even ten fold. But in the case of orange blossoms it appears that the hot process or petroleum ether extracts all the odor, and does not increase the quantity by being kept alive

The origin of perfume in the growing flower is itself not yet fully explained. The generally accepted theory is that the perfume or odor is elaborated in the chloro-

It Was Discovered That the Process Which Does Not Instantly Kill the Cut Blossoms Yields Ten Times as Much Perfume as That Which Withers the Bloom at Once.

phyl organs of the plant—i. e., in the leaves—whence the blossoms gather it through the stems and twigs. In the blossoms the materials coming from the respiratory organs (the leaves through which the plant breathes) are modified in such a way as to become odors. In some plants the odor is fully developed in the leaves, twigs, trunk and roots, not waiting until it reaches the blossom for fullest elaboration, although in the flower it reaches its highest state and greatest volatility, or power of evaporation in the air.

This perfume is found to exist in the fine oil, called the essential oil on account of its specially characteristic odor and chemical qualities, and is very volatile, throwing off immense numbers of very fine particles, which reach the olfactory bulbs of our noses, stirs the nerves into pleasant activity, when we say that we smell a sweet perfume.

The various methods of extracting these odors from the blossoms are based upon this property of volatility, and the other characteristic of their solubility in various organic solvents.

The most ancient nations knew only one method of extraction, which was the maceration of the petals in vegetable oils, which were then clarified and used for anointing the hair and the body.

The knowledge of these facts is valuable to every one who loves flowers, pointing the way to the fullest possible enjoyment of the odor, which is one of the greatest pleasures conveyed by them. In the light of these facts it seems advisable to keep jasmin, tuberose and other blossoms of that kind in as cool atmosphere as possible, if they are to continue to store up sweetness. On the other hand if we want to obtain the fullest odor of orange blossoms a warm atmosphere helps most, and they will die more quickly in cool air.

Roses and violets, which are the commonest flowers with us, partake more of the nature of the jasmin, and therefore continue to give forth odor under cooler conditions and live longer than if shut up in a warm steam-heated room. It has been frequently observed that flowers wilt in a superheated room, as they must, and, if kept there too long, die quickly.

If you want to get the largest possible enjoyment from these flowers it is wise to put them in the icebox over night, or to open the windows and give them cool air, seeing to it that they are not exposed to freezing air, which would, of course, kill them at once.

Economy in securing the greatest amount of odor from the flowers we enjoy is possible if we will remember these facts, especially the remarkable discovery that many varieties continue to create odor after they are cut and will give it forth for days, even weeks. If the flowers are cared for properly and in the light of their natures, as now ascertained. Clipping the stems daily is also recommended because the pores of the end of the stem are apt to clog, and when a little bit is clipped off the pores are cleared again and the blossom is refreshed by the water in the vase.

It must be remembered also that all bindings, whether of string or wire, should be removed, so that the flow of moisture is not interfered with, and the coolness of the water is allowed to reach the blossom itself.

It is understood that the direct rays of the sun should not reach the cut flowers, as they wilt at once, not only on account of the light rays, but on account of the heat which passes along these rays. Keep the flowers as cool as you can if you would enjoy them most, and allow them to live and increase the delicious odors which charm all of us.

The Right and Wrong Way to GET RID OF FAT

By WILLIAM LEE HOWARD, M. D.

ABOUT 50 per cent of women who are troubled with overfatness inherit the tendency. Hence when a young woman comes of a family whose mother or grandmother was a very fat person she should at an early age commence to regulate her habits of eating and sleeping to avoid the hereditary trait.

The surest way to do this is to avoid eating fatty foods and those rich in carbohydrates—sugars. Sweets, malt liquors, syrups, soda waters flavored with syrups, any substance containing glucose, are what we mean by carbohydrates. Starchy foods, such as potatoes and the ordinary white bread are to be left alone

There is one thing the person who is trying to reduce flesh must not do—take any of the preparations out on the market and advertised to reduce flesh at a rapid rate. This is a dangerous method and I make no exceptions

Remember that the accumulation of fat has gone on slowly and the same slow method must be used in getting rid of it. You became fat through a process of nature; that is, by a growth due to faulty eating or your racial inheritance or predisposition. Knowing this fact you should not interfere with nature by putting poisons in your system, but assist nature by keeping out of your body those foods and drinks which turn into fat.

Where the fat is not due to a real disease—which it seldom is—you can keep yourself in a normal condition by patient care and observing certain rules and acquiring certain habits.

Oxygen will burn up fat in the body quicker than anything else. To get this fat-remover into your blood and tissues requires deep breathing in fresh air. Exercise in fresh air is the best way of accomplishing this. Hill climbing is most excellent Any exercise which makes you breathe deeply and rapidly is what you want. If you are not situated so that you can get this every day you can certainly stand in front of an open window and practise deep breathing.

But in taking violent exercise you must first be certain that your age and physical condition is such that no harm will result.

Many women and some men have been advised to take violent exercises when their hearts and arteries were not in a condition to stand the increased blood pressure. If you have been accumulating fat for some years the probability is that there is an overamount surrounding your heart. In this case you should go at exercise slowly and carefully until this internal fat is reduced. You can tell about this by the freedom with which you breathe when climbing stairs or upon hilly walks. If the distress is great and puts your heart going like a trip-hammer, reduce the amount and character of exercise

You must reduce your hours of sleep. Sleep is a great fat-producer and an over-fat person enjoys long hours in bed. Get out early in the morning and walk; cut down your sleep at least two hours but take it off the morning hours; not the night.

Lean meats are what you need, and pure water. Coffee rich with cream will not aid you in your efforts. Tea without milk or cream may be taken. Cold baths will send the blood rich in oxygen to the surface of the body and burn up fat around your skin.

There are many schemes and methods going under different names—such as banting, for example—which have had their vogue. Really they all amount to about the same idea—the intake of oxygen and the avoidance of fat-producing foods. Many of the rules which are given the patients to follow at the fashionable cures. Nauheim, Carlsbad, Vichy, Aix, Ems, Kissingen, Spa can reduce as well in her flat as at Carlsbad. The only difference is that human nature likes to be with the crowd and fashion and kept up to a certain standard by the orders of famous doctors. A thorough examination by your physician is all you need to go ahead and remove your surplus flesh.

A glass of laxative water on one day about half an hour after each meal and the same with a glass of Vichy, alternate days, will be of great assistance. Then take also a glass of saline water half an hour before breakfast.

Patience and perseverance will do the rest for you.

Why MEN ARE BALD More Often Than WOMEN

DR. GUELPA, of Paris, has made some interesting studies pertaining to the scalp and the hair, which have led him to conclude that men are more frequently bald than women for three reasons. First of all, they wear hard, heavy hats; secondly, they cut their hair too short both in Summer and Winter, and in the third place, men usually are greater eaters than women.

Dr. Guelpa points out the fact that the scalp can actually be compared to soil; the hair to the vegetation springing from that soil. When the soil is poor and improperly looked after, microbes will attack it and kill off its vegetation. Similarly, if the scalp is not properly cared for the hair stops sprouting.

Each hair consists of a canal, the root or matrix, and the sebum, an oily substance, which supplies the hair with nourishment. Under normal conditions the sebum is a liquid oil. In illness, or if irritated, or unduly subjected to pressure, the sebum thickens, coagulates and forms hard little globules, which choke up the matrix. The hair is shut off from its source of supply and withers.

It will readily be seen that a heavy and hard hat, such as a derby, or a heavy straw hat, is bound to exert a deleterious pressure clipping the hair, or wearing it very short, leaves the hair at the mercy of atmospheric conditions, of cold, heat and dust. The sebum, like all oily substances, tends to congulate when the temperature is low, and while the long hair of women affords a protection that is ample against this condition, the short hair of men positively invites destruction of the hair roots.

A meat diet increases the proportion of acids in the blood, and consequently also increases the acids in the waste thrown off by the body in the form of perspiration. This acid perspiration is particularly harmful to the hair, as it stimulates unduly the flow of the sebum and as the hair cannot absorb this unusual amount of fluid placed at its command, the fluid thickens and clogs the roots of the hair and clogs them up. As obese persons perspire more freely than thin individuals, the explanation is at hand for the baldness which invariably adds to the misery and repulsiveness of the fat man.

If men would substitute light felt hats, such as Fedoras, for Derbys in Winter, and wear soft straw instead of the firm tissued Panamas or hard-as-board straw hats, with which they adorn themselves in Summer, baldness would soon be on the wane among them.

Why SCIENCE Approves of LOVE MATCHES

A DEFENSE of love at first sight was made by Sir James Crichton Brown in his presidential address to the conference of Sanitary Inspectors.

"I am a believer," the celebrated physician said, "in the love match, not only from a romantic but from a eugenic point of view. In a very large proportion of marriages love plays no part, or only a very subordinate one. Rank, social influence, ambition, and what Carlisle calls the cash nexus are dominant factors, but marriages thus made are not the most likely to produce favorable results in the next generation.

"Our aristocracy, the late Professor Laycock used to say, has been saved by its occasional alliances with actresses and milkmaids. There must be deep physiological significance in the spontaneous, inexplicable attraction that instantly draws two persons into sympathetic union, and the offspring of unions thus brought about are, I believe, more likely to be healthy than the offspring of those who have allied themselves in cold blood from mercenary or sordid motives.

"I am not defending foolish, hasty early marriages, of which we have a great deal too many. The abolition of Gretna Green was a loss to the novelist, but a gain to the country. Love at first sight of the right kind blesses him who has experienced it, and is charged with blessings for those that come after him."

On the same subject President David Starr Jordan, of Leland Stanford University, takes up this phase of eugenics and calls it the "Burbanking of the Human Race." He agrees with Sir James Crichton Browne in the matter of love, declaring that love is the best basis for marriage

"I used the phrase, 'Burbanking the Race,'" says President Jordan, "to show that, although systematic, scientific selection of mates could be made to produce great physical strength, beauty, endurance and even mental power, those very persons who might be thus effectively mated would never submit to State dictation.

"If they would, they must in time eliminate the most vital element in human evolution—love and initiative. Love is the best basis for marriage, and love is a very real and noble thing, in spite of the baseness of its imitations.

"The value of eugenic study is in the diffusion of sound ideas of live and parenthood. Government can do something to refusing to those who cannot care for themselves because of feeble-mindedness, disease and vice, but legislation must be undertaken very cautiously, giving the individual benefit of all doubt."

Do the CONTINENTS MOVE?

ACCORDING to an instructor in the University of Marburg, by the name of Wegener, all the great continents are capable of both vertical and horizontal motion.

Greenland, if lunar observations are to be relied upon, has moved nearly two-thirds of a mile away from Europe in eighty-four years, while Cambridge, Massachusetts, has receded from England only 295 feet during the last twenty-six years

Astounding as this sounds, Wegener declares this is due to the surface formation which was by means of vertical and horizontal displacement. The following comment has been made by a writer in a French scientific review:

"According to this hypothesis the surface has been formed by vertical and horizontal displacements. The continental masses—that is to say, the different parts of the world such as Europe, America, etc.—are susceptible of vertical displacement as if they were blocks of floating ice. As soon as there is an increased weight on them they sink. This increase may be due to continental ice covering the country According to preliminary calculations, a weight of 3¼ feet of ice would cause a sinking of 3 feet. Horizontal displacements are continually occurring, as is shown by variations of distance between the continents Thus lunar observations have proved that Greenland, during eighty-four years has receded from Europe 3,083 feet On the other hand, determinations made at different times, by means of the transatlantic cables, of the distance separating Greenwich England, from Cambridge, Massachusetts, have shown that North America, during twenty-six years, has receded from Europe about 295 feet. Of course, these measurements, almost all dating about ten years back, should be remade and rendered more exact by the assistance of wireless telegraphy."

Why TOO MUCH SLEEP Causes Disease

A VIENNESE physician has recently pointed out new dangers of oversleeping. He declares that he has discovered too much sleep causes diseases quite as menacing to comfort as overeating, and infinitely more dangerous to life itself. Gall-stones, gravel and other allied diseases, he says, are frequently, although not always, caused by oversleeping. During sleep a change occurs in the metabolism of the body—that is, in the chemical changes of the living cell The change in cellular tissue is much slower during sleep than in the waking state, a fact which is generally known and frequently referred to when in convalescence we hear someone remark, "He doesn't need much food because he is sleeping so much."

When a healthy person unduly prolongs the hours of slumber there is an insufficient waste of cellular tissue, while the food supply as a rule is not diminished. What becomes of the tissue and juices of the body which normally would be drained away during the waking hours, but which, because of long sleeping hours, remain in the body? They are deposited in one or more of the vital organs—as, for instance, the kidneys or the bladder, where ultimately they cause the severe and dangerous disturbances known as gravel and gall-stones.

Contrary to general belief, brainworkers do not require as much sleep as manual laborers. Undue indulgence in sleep engenders a desire for more sleep. Everybody has experienced the peculiar brightness and lucidity of the brain following a sleepless night, and everybody knows from experience the stupid and heavy feeling which frequently follows a deep, dreamless slumber. The brain is not refreshed particular'y during a dreamless sleep. It is the body whose ravages must be repaired. Nervous people particularly make a grave mistake in remaining in bed late in the morning in hopes of falling asleep again. They live between waking and sleeping, instead of rousing themselves, getting up and out of the house and using their muscles in the open air. The success of many a sanatarium for "nervous wrecks" consists in forcing the patients to get up early—in some institutions before sunrise—whether they have slept through the night or not. By fatiguing the muscular system through constant exercise through the day, sleep for the following night is insured, and this regime rigidly adhered to for three or four weeks is bound to cure the worst case of "nerves" that ever happened.

Nervous people are not ill physically; they are ill psychically. They are nervous because they live in a perpetual conflict between environment and their desires. Slight noises irritate them; they long for quiet. Some abhor solitude, others detest society. The only cast-iron rule that seems to apply to nervous folks is the one that they long for the unattainable. In sleeping, as has been pointed out by a famous neurologist, our unfulfilled desires and wishes create "a heaven of fulfilled desire" and the "nervous wreck" whose illbalanced desires are continually on a rampage in allowing himself or herself to doze on in bed in the morning indulges in a riotous orgy of fancied fulfillment of wishes, thereby augmenting the disease instead of effecting a cure.

One hears frequent complaints of insomnia from persons who tell in the next breath that they have slept from four to five hours' but who think that in order to maintain perfect health eight or nine hours of sleep are necessary. As a matter of fact, there are periods in everyone's life when health is so abundant that five hours and, in exceptional cases, four hours sleep are ample. Persons who sleep for five hours and no longer are not suffering from insomnia. They are enjoying exceptional bodily health.

But the entire five hours must be devoted to a sound sleep, or otherwise the body will not be sufficiently rested.

FIRE SIGNALS For Crossings

WHENEVER there is a fire in the busy districts of a great city—or in any sizable city, in fact—there is always great danger both to the firemen driving the apparatus and to the citizens afoot, to teams and automobiles.

The firemen must go at record speed to the scene of the fire and they need every inch of the street at the corners for the long ladder trucks and heavy engines to make the curves in

Policemen rush out and warn the people as best they can to keep out of the way, to stop close to the curbings and all that, and yet many accidents happen as people drive in from cross streets without warning that the firemen are coming, and get in the way.

A great deal of property is lost by delays that are sometimes caused by such accidents, while firemen and citizens are frequently hurt and sometimes killed under such circumstances.

To help avoid all this trouble an inventor has devised a warning, something like a railroad semaphore signal, to be placed at street corners and to be worked automatically along the route the firemen will take. This novel safeguard was designed by the Gamewell Fire Alarm Telegraph Company of New York, and wherever it has been tried it has given splendid satisfaction.

The signals each consist of a semaphore operated by a motor, electric light and loud ringing vibrating bell. These signals are connected on a circuit extending to the fire alarm central station or to a fire engine house. The operation of a switch in the engine house or central station operates a relay or controller at the street crossing signal, causing the semaphore light and bell to operate and indicate the approach of the fire department apparatus. They have proved themselves extremely valuable in protecting the fire department apparatus and firemen from injury as well as in protecting the public.

The light, working automatically, serves as a warning at night, for it not only glows a danger signal soon understood by all residents of the city, but it illumines the sign "FIRE," and this, with the ringing of the bell, will generally prove sufficient to make even a stranger to such signals understand the danger and act accordingly.

A great many times the police do not know of the fire until they hear the approach of the engines, which gives them no time to keep the people out of danger or vehicles from crowding in the path of the apparatus.

Mrs. Drummond's $100,000,000 Dilemma

She Can't Bear to Leave Her English Home and Husband, but Unless She Does Her Two Sons Will Lose the Fortune Grandfather Marshall Field Left Them on Condition That They Become American Business Men

A New Portrait of Mrs. Maldwin Drummond, the Widow of Marshall Field, Junior. Her Two Sons Will Lose the $100,000,000 Their Grandfather Left Them Unless She Brings Them Up as Americans—and If She Does This She Must Count on a Long Separation from Her English Home and Husband.

MRS. MALDWIN DRUMMOND, of London, who was the widow of Marshall Field, Jr., of Chicago and mother of the two boys, Marshall and Henry, who are to share the enormous fortune left by their grandfather, Marshall Field, Sr., is in serious dilemma. If she follows out her present plan and makes Englishmen of her two sons they may lose a large share of their incomes. If she lives up to the strict letter of the instructions left by the founder of the family she will have to separate either from her present husband, an Englishman of high standing, or from her sons. Just what will she do? And what will happen in case she obeys the instructions given to his trustees by the late merchant prince?

Mrs. Drummond's present husband, a well-known Englishman and heir to several million dollars, will not come to this country to live. His interests are all on the other side and he is not happy when far from Piccadilly. Mrs. Drummond has identified herself entirely with her husband's interests and friends, and naturally does not want to come to this country to live. And, naturally, she wants her sons with her in the English home. For eight years, therefore, they have lived the life of English boys of their class.

Marshall Field, Sr., left $120,000,000 to these two grandsons, the sons of his only son. His will was one of the most peculiar ever filed in the state of Illinois.

To fully understand the dilemma in which Mrs. Drummond finds herself it is necessary to go into the family history.

Marshall Field was one of the greatest merchants that this country has ever known. The Marshall Field Company is known throughout the world.

With everything that money could buy, Mr. Field was an unhappy man. He suffered many disappointments in his family. His sorrows were many. He had an only son and an only daughter. His daughter, Ethel, after divorcing her first husband, Arthur Tree, of Chicago, fell in love with an Englishman, Donald Beatty, [illegible] married her and went to live in England. The Standart, a Combined Warship and Yacht, 500 Feet Long.

The Czar Rowing His Family Around His Yacht, the only Time He Has Felt Free to Go Unguarded.

STABBED ON THE CZAR'S YACHT!

How a Nihilist Crept Aboard the "Standart" and, Reaching up Through a Skylight, Plunged a Knife into Russia's Little Crown Prince, Before the Eyes of the Czar and Czarina and All the Royal Suite

St Petersburg, Oct. 30

EVEN before this reaches you the injury inflicted by the assassin upon the little Czarevitch may have had a fatal ending. That the Czar's heir is suffering from peritonitis is now admitted by the Court officials, and, as everybody knows, this means that the wound is of a very dangerous character.

It is now certain that the Czarevitch's injury was the result of an attempt to assassinate him, although the Court officials continue to call it an accident and conceal all the circumstances of the case. The mystery they maintain corroborates the assassination theory.

A feeling of indignation combined with helpless terror prevails among the enlightened classes of Russians over this attempt. What can be said in defense of a party of revolutionists who would take the life of an innocent eight-year-old child? Yet such is the diabolical ingenuity of these terrorists that it seems hopeless to check them.

A clue to the present mystery has been given Admiral Chagin, the commander of the Czar's yacht, the Standart, committed suicide owing to a love affair with Helen Soyolof, a court lady, became known.

The attempt on the Czarevitch's life occurred on board the Standart. The little prince was sick at Spala, a vast estate in Poland covering over ten square miles. On October 24 the Court issued a bulletin stating that the Czarevitch was sick, as the result of an accident which happened on October 17. It was simply stated that he fell and injured himself in the groin.

On October 14 the Czar and his family were on board the Standart at Libau on the Baltic Sea. If the Czarevitch was wounded on the 14th he must have continued in a critical state over three hundred miles on the sea to Spala. Every Russian believes that the court officials would have done anything to endanger the child's life for the sake of taking him out of a place where they could hide him from public observation.

An officer of the yacht has told the facts of what happened on the Standart. On October 7, only a week before the attempt, Admiral Chagin, the commander of the Standart, engaged three new sailors. The yacht, which carries a crew of 300 men, had become shorthanded through an outbreak of typhoid fever which laid up a dozen men. The new men were recommended to the Admiral by personal friends. It was this emergency that gave the Nihilist a chance to creep abroad the Standart.

The Czar and his family have always considered themselves comparatively free from danger on their yacht, although certain incidents must have disturbed their confidence. During the Summer of 1907 the yacht very nearly ran on a rock in the Gulf of Finland, and at another time in the same year, it was reported, a deadly mine was found floating in the vicinity of the ship.

At the time of the grounding the Czar called Admiral Chagin to him and said:

"Tell me frankly, Admiral, am I and my family safe from treachery on board my own yacht?"

The Admiral, who was a vigorous, hearty man with a manner that inspired confidence, replied:

"Sire, I answer for your safety with my life. No traitor can ever find footing on this ship. If such a thing ever happens I blow out my brains. I am confident I shall never have to do so."

The Czar felt that if the crew was faithful he was practically free from danger from outer perils. A Nihilist can hardly hide himself on the sea and throw bombs. Consequently many of the extraordinary precautions taken to guard the imperial family on land are relaxed at sea. Of the two hundred picked Cossacks who constantly guard the imperial children only six are carried on the yacht.

The little Czarevitch and his older sisters, the Grand Duchesses Olga, Tatiana, Marie and Anastasia, played about at liberty on the Standart. When the ship was in sheltered waters the Czar would take them out unattended in a rowboat. It was his only opportunity to enjoy freedom.

The Czarevitch was encouraged to consider himself a sailor because his ancestor Peter the Great, who founded the Russian Empire was deeply interested in the sea. The Czarevitch is most often photographed in sailor's dress, although he has the uniforms of five Russian regiments.

As the children played on the deck of the ship, the new sailors did not have much chance to come in direct contact with him. The officers were generally watching them and the faithful Cossacks were always there.

On October 14 the Czarevitch was playing with his father, mother and sisters, started to climb the skylight above the sailors' dining saloon. As he did so a knife was thrust at him by a hand from beneath the skylight and the boy fell with a shriek to the deck.

Officers, Cossacks and sailors, always keyed up for trouble in the Czars service, rushed forward. Some attended to the Czarevitch while others sprang to the cabin. There they found one of the newly enlisted sailors, who went by the name of Gregory Vasilief with a knife in his hand.

"The Czarevitch was playing near the skylight above the sailors' cabin, when a long knife was thrust savagely at him from below."

He fought savagely and after killing one of the Cossacks was killed himself.

The assassin's knife had evidently caught in the Czarevitch's thighbone and only this circumstance had prevented him from making a stroke which would have disemboweled the child.

The injured Czarevitch and the imperial family were landed at the nearest port and transferred by rail to Spala.

The Standart proceeded to Cronstadt. Four days later Admiral Chagin committed suicide by blowing his brains out. He had only had sufficient time after the attempt to perform his routine duties, to take his ship back to Cronstadt and obtain leave of absence.

He had kept his promise to the Czar, and by his act he confessed that the Nihilists had gained a footing on the imperial yacht.

Then his will was made public and added a new element to the mystery. By this will, made long before his death, he left 25,000 marks to a girl student named Helen Soyolof, with whom he had been in love for several years. When she heard of his death she also attempted to kill herself, but did not succeed and is now being held by the secret police.

Helen Soyolof is believed to be a member of the extreme terrorist wing of the revolutionary party. Women have always played leading parts in Russian revolutionary movements. This body of extremists was founded by the survivors of the Nihilist organization that brought about the assassination of the Czar Alexander II in 1881. Vera Figner was the guiding spirit in that plot, although she took no part in the fatal crime. She was sentenced to death, but her sentence was commuted to imprisonment and she is now living in Switzerland.

Other members of the old organization are still living. Helen Soyolof was one of their most enthusiastic young disciples.

It was she who planned the nefarious plot of invading the comparative security enjoyed by the Czar on his yacht. She based her plot upon the fact that during the disturbances, following the Russian defeats in the Japanese war, a revolutionary and mutinous spirit became widespread in the Russian navy.

The men on the battleship Potemkin seized the ship, set out on a piratical career, bombarded the ports of Odessa and Sebastopol and terrorized the Black Sea. The crews of other warships behaved in a similar manner. The mutiny came to an end simply because the men could not feed themselves indefinitely at sea.

This mutiny was so widespread that it was not practical to shoot all the men concerned. Consequently a great number of dangerous revolutionists were let loose in the country. The terrorists, who were plotting to kill the Czarevitch, made the acquaintance of some of the old mutineers. Among them was one, whose brother had been shot as a ring leader of the Potemkin mutiny. Maddened with the injuries he had suffered he agreed to enter into the plot.

He obtained a certificate of a naval sailor of good character, named Gregory Vasilief recently dead, and with this and his training it was easy to obtain a place on the Standart at a time when new men were being taken on in a hurry. It is naturally reasoned that Helen Soyolof must have recommended the man to her adorer Admiral Chagin. With this link the chain of evidence concerning the plot is complete.

Why do the terrorists try to assassinate a little child? The explanation is that it is part of the system by which they aim to terrorize the Czar into a condition in which they can obtain what they want from him. They intend to make him execute their will and destroy his own adherents.

From events which have happened, it seems evident that they do not intend to kill the Czar. Bombs explode, kitsmus and officials die all around him, the hand of death is everywhere, but his own miserable life is spared. Death only comes near enough to him to make him feel its terrors in every form.

The have assassinated his most victorious uncle, the Grand Duke Sergius, his most valuable administrator, General Trepoff, and a host of others who were leading lives in the government.

Numerous plots, which have been spoken of as attempts to kill the Czar, were really intended to endanger his whole family rather than aimed directly at his life. Again and again poison has been served at the Czar's table. Obviously this was as likely to destroy the life of any member of his family as himself. Four years ago the Czarina's niece, the little Princess Elizabeth of Hesse, died mysteriously while she was staying with the Russian imperial family. It is believed that her death was due to a poisoned pie intended for the Czar.

At another time bombs disguised as apples were placed among the fruit served on the Czar's table. They were discovered by one of the secret police officers who had worked among the servants who waited on the Czar.

Dynamite was found concealed beneath the floor in the dining room of the Winter Palace of St. Petersburg. This, like the other attempts, threatened the lives of the Czar's children as much as himself.

In the Summer of 1815, while the Czar was staying at his country palace of Czarskoe-Selo, the terrorists played the strange trick of kidnapping the Czarevitch. He disappeared for nine hours and was then returned as mysteriously as he had disappeared.

During his absence an indescribable state of panic prevailed at the palace. In this way the terrorists demonstrated fully that they had the Czar and his family completely at their mercy.

All the plots and attempts mentioned prove clearly the diabolical plan of the terrorists to reduce the Czar to a state in which he will have no mind of his own.

If they killed him, he could no longer fear them. Fear is what they desire most of all. By merely maiming the Czarevitch they have tortured the father's feelings as much as if they had killed the boy. It is well known that they have made the Czarina a nervous wreck and practically insane.

Hitherto the Czar himself has opposed a curious dull fatalistic obstinacy to all their efforts. How long will his mind hold out against the cumulative force of all these horrors?

Now for the Corrugated Ship

THE ship of the future will have crinkly sides, according to Captain G. S. MacIlwaine, of the British navy.

Such a ship has already been constructed. It has corrugations or projections, running in a fore and aft direction, below the load line. From the top of the upper corrugation to the bottom of the next below, the distance is 15 feet, 3 inches, the groove between being of the same dimensions as the corrugations. From the inner edges of the frames the corrugation project 22 inches, tapering forward and aft till they merge into the ends of the vessel.

"The claims made for this type of ship," said Captain MacIlwaine, "are that she is stronger than the plain-sided ship, that she is steadier at sea, and possesses greater stability, that vibration is much reduced, that her cargo capacity is increased (but she is more handier, and that she can be carried 20 per cent further on a ton of coal than a plain ship of similar dimensions."

By way of practical proof of his claims the captain gave figures which he obtained during voyages in a ship built on the corrugated principle. The average "slip" was 2 per cent, against 13 per cent for a plain vessel, the engine revolutions were fewer for a given speed and less fuel was consumed for the same speed.

"My faith in the corrugated ship," he said, "is such that in my humble judgment the country cannot stand aside and see her pass into other hands. An experiment in the building of a torpedo boat or destroyer, even if it failed to realize the high est exceptions, would cost nothing if successful, and it would inaugurate a new era."

A Husband for Every Woman in the United States

Census Shows Bachelors Outnumber the Spinsters, and Many Other Remarkable Facts About the Married and the Unmarried in the Different States and Large Cities of This Country

By Rene Bache.

WHY should any woman in this country be an old maid?

Such a thing ought not to happen. It should be impossible, when one considers the fact that there are in the United States 12,550,119 single men, and only 8,933,164 single women. There is, in other words, an excess of 3,616,995 bachelors, which makes it manifestly unfair for an occasional man—Nat Goodwin, for instance—to have a succession of wives.

The figures are absolutely correct; they are furnished by the Government Census Bureau. It is only necessary to add, by way of explanation, that they take in all unmarried persons fifteen years of age and over.

There are at the present time in this country 994 boys and 1,712 girls under fifteen years of age who are married or widowed; but this number is relatively so small that it is not worth taking into account.

One sees from the figures above given that there are in the United States four bachelors to every three spinsters. Why, then, do so many women become old maids? There are several reasons.

In the first place, a good many men never marry. The newly-gathered census data show that marriage as an institution is growing somewhat less popular than it used to be. Fewer people are accepting bonds of wedlock. Probably the high cost of living has something to do with this fact; and the flocking of women into industrial pursuits has rendered them less anxious to get husbands.

"Is it to Boston's credit or discredit that it has more bachelors than old maids?"

"Widows are not so likely to marry again as widowers."

At all events, more people remain single than formerly. But one of the principal reasons for the multiplication of old maids in the eastern part of the country is that great numbers of young bachelors go West and stay there. In the far Western States there are, in the total population (all ages), 129 males for every 100 females.

The number of widows in the United States is more than twice as great as the number of widowers, the exact figures being 3,176,236 widows and 1,471,891 widowers. These figures have an important significance. They show that men who have lost their wives are much more likely to remarry than women who have lost their husbands.

But there is another point of interest here concerned. Nearly all of the widowers who remarry pick out single women for their second wives; and this is one reason why the spinsters are so much fewer than the bachelors.

"The high cost of living is one reason why so many men and women never marry."

The widowers cobble them up.

It is not only on this account, however, that the men who appear in the census tables as widowers are so much fewer than the widows. The fact that men marry at an older age than the women has a good deal to do with the matter. Being older, they are likely to predecease their wives.

Everywhere in the United States women marry much earlier than men. Only one man in 156 marries before he is twenty years of age; but eleven and a half women in every 100 are wives by the time their first score of years has been turned.

Most people imagine that there is an overplus of spinsters in the New England States, but this is by no means true. There is no State in New England that has not a greater number of unmarried men than unmarried women. Maine has of bachelors an excess of 22,715. New Hampshire has a surplus of 20,155. Vermont has a surplus of 12,864. Massachusetts has a surplus of 14,008. Rhode Island has a surplus of 7,572, and Connecticut has a surplus of 26,866.

Thus, it is obvious that there is plenty of men to go around, even in that part of the country, if all of them would take wives.

There is in the United States a very large overplus of men. As shown by the new census figures there are, in the total population of all ages, one hundred and six males for every one hundred females. This state of affairs is partly due to immigration, which fetches more men than women into the United States. But among native-born white folks there are nearly 103 males for every 100 females.

In the year 1900 there were only 104½ males for every 100 females. The surplusage of the former has markedly increased since then. If one asks where the greatest overplus of men is to be found, the answer is, in Seattle, where there are 137 males for every 100 females. Portland (Ore.) is a very close second.

"The men outnumber the women in many of the Western States. In Nevada there are five men to every woman."

Philadelphia and Baltimore are the only cities of importance which have more women than men. The Maryland metropolis is lowest, with only 92½ males persons for every 100 females. But even Philadelphia has more unmarried men than unmarried women.

Baltimore is the only city in the United States that contains more unmarried women than unmarried men.

"Widowers show a decided preference for single women when they marry again."

There are in New York State 217,668 surplus bachelors. In Pennsylvania there is an overplus of 275,543 unmarried men; in Ohio, 172,327; in Illinois, 236,772; in Michigan, 117,017; in Minnesota 138,043; in Missouri 127,038. But the most attractive hunting ground for husbands is on the Far West.

Take Montana for example. It has 91,760 bachelors and it has only 25,961 spinsters.

Colorado has 129,828 bachelors and 85,931 spinsters.

Oregon has 140,633 bachelors and 55,242 spinsters.

California offers a strong invitation to old maids with 480,292 unmarried men and only 219,546 unmarried women.

Idaho, however, is nearly three bachelors for every spinster, the figures being 59,754 unmarried men and 21,455 unmarried women. Arizona looks better still, with 40,108 bachelors and 8,275 spinsters. Nevada, which has 22,568 bachelors and 4,111 unmarried women. It must be noted as an attractive point in the prospects which Nevada holds out to the bachelor that the available material for its women is limited to a select few.

Of males of all ages in this country, 58.4 10 per cent. are single, 34.10 per cent. are married, and 4.10 per cent. are widowed or divorced.

Of females of all ages, 53 per cent. are single, 34.10 per cent. are married and 7.140 per cent. are widowed or divorced.

Divorced persons are most numerous by far in the Far Western States. They are fewest in the Middle Atlantic and South Atlantic States. In every twelve marriages one is sundered by divorce, taking the country as a whole.

According to the census data, people living in cities are less apt to marry or marry later than the inhabitants of rural sections. People in the North and West are less apt to marry or marry later than in the South.

The newly gathered figures show that most people are married roundabout between the ages of 20 and 24 years, four years earlier than was formerly the case. If there is a falling off in the number of people getting married it is not due to the deferring of marriage. But not so many people enter into wedlock later on and taking the population as a whole, more people ultimately marry. In other words, more remain single.

Of the total population of the United States at the present time, 39 per cent. of the females, fifteen years of age and over, are single. On the other hand, 53 per cent. of the males fifteen years of age and over are unmarried. This shows that there are more males than females in the surplus of bachelors and makes it evident that there is no good and sufficient reason why any woman should be an old maid if she chooses to exert herself to procure a husband.

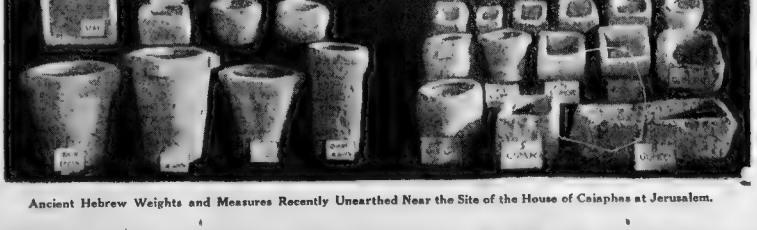
The Bible's System of Weights and Measures Explained at Last

WE frequently read in the Bible about various measures and weights, and hitherto there has been much doubt about their meaning.

Now it is possible to tell just what they were. A number of ancient Hebrew weights and measures have just been unearthed at Jerusalem. They include a cab, a hin, a gerah, a bath or ephah, and a homer or gomer. Among them were measures of various sizes, from one-sixth of a gomer up to eight gomers. There is practically complete series of measures of the gomer class. We read in the Bible about so many ephahs or homers of wheat. Now, biblical scholars will be able to settle definitely the meaning of all these weights.

While the question of weights and measures has been satisfactorily cleared up, there remains much to be learned about the coins used in ancient Palestine. An interesting discussion about the coins appears in the last report of the Palestine Exploration Fund, by Professor J. E. Pilcher, who records some remarkable recent finds of ancient Hebrew coins.



Ancient Hebrew Weights and Measures Recently Unearthed Near the Site of the House of Caiaphas at Jerusalem.

The coinage of Palestine must originally have been derived from ancient Babylon, where the table started from the grain and was worth sixty-four cents of our money, a mina, $32 and a talent, $1,920. Owing to the introduction of Assyrian, Persian, Phoenician, Egyptian and Greek influences into Palestine the answer many centuries occurred.

In 1890 and 1892 two weights were picked up by investigators described as "reseph." They were different in weight, but examination of them has now shown that they originally weighed 156 grains, or one-fiftieth of a mina.

In 1906 Professor Barton, of Bryn Mawr College, acquired, in Samaria, a bronze weight representing a quarter neseph, or 38.58 grains. It was in the form of a tortoise, a Phoenician symbol.

Darius Hystaspes introduced the Persian standard in which the principal coin was the shekel. The Persic silver shekel weighed 172.2 grains. Professor Barton picked up, near Jerusalem, an ancient bronze weight, weighing 117.421 grains Troy. This is two-thirds of the shekel, which was apparently made into thirds in coinage.

St. Matthew calls the piece of money miraculously found in the fish's mouth a "stater," which Professor Pilcher argues to have been a Greek tetradrachma, equivalent to 266 grains of silver.

The Babylonian system of metrology is of great antiquity, and we find it firmly established in the reign of Dungi, king of Ur (about 2400 B. C.), whose long reign was a very important one. Dr. King informs us that "in Ur, too, we obtain evidence of an important administrative reform, by the recovery of three weights for half a shekel, two manehs and twelve shekels respectively. The inscription on one of these states that it has been tested and passed as of the right weight in the sealing house of Nannar."

Two Charming New Gowns and a Dainty Hat of Gold Velour, Designed by Lady Duff-Gordon

Autumn Leaf Afternoon Costume Created in Dull Mahogany Brocade Showing the Long Postilion Back.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's new Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at Nos. 37 and 39 West Fifty-seventh street, New York City

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

I AM showing you this week two costumes that I think are ideal.

The evening costume is very elaborate, just as I think such costumes should be. The afternoon or reception gown is a splendid example of elegant simplicity.

The latter I call an Autumn leaf gown. It is developed in soft, supple brocade that is just the shade of maple leaves when they have turned a deep shade of red. As the fabric is so ornate I have not used any decoration on the gown, for the real lace collar can by no means be called trimming. The girdle and sash ends are of shaded green and brown chiffons.

From shoulder to hem the gown is absolutely plain. Even the sleeves are severely long and plain, as you will notice. This is the correct sleeve for the Winter costume. No other is admissible, if you want to be ultra smart.

The hat worn with this charming gown is a reddish-brown satin beaver, having as its only decoration a long quill of green and gold. The muff is a large flat affair of mink.

The small hat shown in the colour picture is one of the gold velours that Paris has adopted for morning wear almost exclusively. The band of fur is mink and the feathers are brown and gold. This shape is the acme of smartness and is becoming to nine out of ten women.

The evening costume is a decided contrast to these two models it is elaborate to a degree. The fabric is a white crepe charmeuse. The panniers are rather large, but the new court train gives the long lines that are so necessary. The sash girdle as arranged is suitable only for a slender figure. The rhinestone embroidery on the bodice is duplicated on the front of the skirt.

Hair ornaments were never more elaborate; they range from real lace caps to huge osprey feathers. It is possible, however, to use smaller effects.

So let me introduce and recommend to you a narrow and quite light bandeau studded closely with paste, which shades from shining black to a white brilliance and which is worn right across, and low down on the forehead, the little wire loops at either end permitting of its easy and firm fastening under the hair at th esides. And then directly in the centre there uprises to the extent of some fourteen inches, a light osprey mount whose shading from black to white is followed and accentuated by the use of a central line of first black and then white stones. The whole thing is extraordinarily becoming and effective, and it could, of course, be carried out in shades of emerald green or sapphire blue, while though it is so tall, it is so fine and filmy that it can never be a nuisance to those who sit behind it at theatre or opera, so that its wise wearers will not have to undergo the unpleasant and nerve-trying experience of hearing purposely loud and vicious comments on their selfishness in the choice of hair ornaments.

bow. To be lovely it should be little in evidence, so little, in fact, that it seems to be merely an appetizing and disappearing feature—so to speak—a dimple playing peekaboo.

Instead of this what do you probably see? A sharp, bony corner, or a mass of unsightly wrinkles, in other case darker than the surrounding flesh. Almost certainly the skin covering it is dark and rough, "a patch of goose flesh" a young girl complained when dressing for a dance.

Now what is to be done?

Try first to rid the elbows of their disfiguring redness or darker color. Rub them every night before retiring with a half grape fruit. This is better than a lemon because the elbow can settle into it and work about it. If you place the halves of grape fruit on a table and rest your elbows in them you can read or chat or mediate and leave the elbows to their bleaching for an indefinite time. Repeat this every night until you notice an improvement in their color.

But do not be satisfied with this progress. Scrub the elbows daily with warm water and a bleaching soap. One of the peroxide soaps would be useful. Or use castile soap with water, into which you have sprinkled a few drops of peroxide of hydrogen or of ammonia.

An ingenuous girl I know bound slices of lemon on her elbows every night before going to bed. While this is not as quickly efficacious as the grape fruit it is cheaper.

When this gradual whitening of the elbows has been accomplished take the next step in their beautifying, which is smoothing them. If they are very rough, scrub them with a pumice stone that has been dipped into warm water. Rub the roughened spots gently with this, and slowly, lest you irritate the skin. Then apply cold cream or olive oil to allay even any tendency to irritation. Or if they are only slightly roughened, rubbing them round and round with fingers that have been spread with cocoanut oil is enough, if long continued, to soften them.

If the elbows are very sharp massaging the flesh about them with palms well greased with mutton tallow should in time nourish them into roundness.

Two German women whom I met in the Black Forest had their arms swathed about the middle with strange, bulging bandages. I asked them what malady afflicted them and they first looked puzzled, then laughed.

"Madame" they replied, "We are calling the sheep to the aid of our arms." Having taken the baths too strenuously their arms had grown thin and they were fattening them and rounding out the elbows by means of one layer of mutton tallow, one of cotton and a final one of fluen

Beauty Questions Answered

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri.

M. J. ASKS if she can reduce the size and prominence of her cheek bones.

No, but you can so arrange your hair and select hats that they will not seem so prominent. Make a study of it, and when you have solved the problem for yourself let me know. I should have to know more about your general appearance to further advise you in this case.

L. L. G. complains of gooseflesh that mars the beauty of her neck and arms.

Avoid the causes. Exposure to cold causes gooseflesh. Habitual nervousness sometimes has the same effect. More attention to bathing and exercise will help to remedy that condition. Rubbing the affected parts with pumice stone and afterward with cold cream is sometimes done with success.

M. M. C. desires counsel about a defect of her figure. One hip, she complains, has become larger than the other and is noticeably so. "Carrying books and standing on one foot have caused it," she says, indirectly answering her own question.

Stop doing what has caused this irregularity of figure. Shift your weight to the other side and give that a chance to grow. Carry the books in the other arm. Nature is always glad to help restore the balance lost by our bad habits.

My friend [illegible] exposure to the sun also [illegible] high collars. What would you recommend to whiten it?" continues M. M. C.

I should first very lightly rub pumice stone over the stained part of the skin and apply any good cold cream to relieve the irritation. When the irritation had quite healed I should resort to rubbing the spot, if still stained, with slices of lemon. This failing, I should bleach it with peroxide applied with cloth or sponge. A last measure would be to scrub it with warm water, into which a few drops of ammonia or benzoin had been sprinkled, using oatmeal or almond meal instead of soap.

M. M. C. asks further advice as to what shall be done with hair that is darker in the back than the front, hers being dark brown in the back and light brown in front.

That is not unusual, and simply shows that your hair is beginning to grow darker, since you are twenty-one. If you were forty-one or fifty-one I would suspect that the reverse were taking place. You might wash the back part of the hair oftener than the front, using a spoonful of borax in a bowl of water, or the same amount of lemon juice, or a half tablespoonful of ammonia. But it is doubtful whether your hair would not still be uneven. Better let it all grow darker.

E. R. complains of one eye following the other in her eyes, and suspects that her blood requires purifying.

I don't doubt it. I am personally partial to a mixture of equal parts of cream of tartar and sulphur for that purpose. I take a dose of a teaspoonful of the mixture after every meal while clearing my skin. Sulphur and molasses in equal quantities is a fine old-fashioned remedy. Eat much fruit and drink ten glasses of water a day and your complexion will improve.

M. L. C. asks me to advise her how to prevent the falling of her hair and itching of her scalp, and on the same page asks how to prepare henna tea for dyeing the hair, which she says is growing gray at the temples.

Don't try the henna until you have reinvigorated your scalp and hair by shampooing and massage. If you wash your scalp and hair two or three times a week the itching should cease. The twice a year shedding of the hair should not alarm you if you do not lose more than about a hundred hairs a day. Loosen the skin of the scalp by daily massage and rub into it one of the hair growers, as pure olive oil.

F. H. desires a formula for a reliable hair grower and advice as to how to develop the bust.

If your hair is dry, and falling hair usually is, use this old French remedy: Almond oil, 3 ozs.; oil of rosemary, 1 oz.; oil of cinnamon, 30 drops. Massage the scalp with it.

A Real Butterfly Princess

The Only Girl in the World Who Earns Her Living by Raising Rare Moths and Butterflies for Scientists and Collectors

Ximena Exhibiting Some of Her Highly-Prized Specimens.

TO keep their collections of butterflies and moths up to date almost every museum of natural history in the world relies to a great extent upon the efforts of an eighteen-year-old California girl.

This very indispensable young woman is Ximena McGlashan, of Truckee, a little mountain town near Lake Tahoe on the eastern boundary of California. She is the daughter of General C. F. McGlashan, a well-known Western lawyer and a recognized authority on things entomological. Indeed, it was because the General's law practice and business interests made it impossible for him to supply the great demand for entomological specimens which came to him from every corner of the globe that he was willing for Ximena to take up the work.

Ximena was brought up among the butterflies. Not only her father, but her mother, too, was an enthusiastic student of entomology, and their home was always a veritable entomological museum, while the wild country in which it was situated was actually alive with butterflies and moths of a thousand different varieties.

From such an environment it was not strange that Ximena should have acquired a love for nature-study, and, as a matter of fact, long before she left high school she was far better versed in entomology than the average high school teacher.

When she graduated, a year ago, her father decided to let her take up collecting as a profession instead of teaching school, as had been originally intended. Among the many inducements which the General had received from collectors was an offer from a well-known authority to pay him a flat rate of 5 cents apiece for every specimen rare or common, which he might supply. This offer the General turned over to Ximena and she began business at once. Many of the specimens she obtained and shipped were doubtless worth considerably more than the 5 cents she received for them, some of them fetching from one to five dollars on the market, but the thousands of common varieties she shipped with the order made the flat rate very profitable.

Ximena is not only an expert catcher of butterflies and moths but a breeder of them, as well. In this way her stock is being constantly replenished. Her "plant" is located in the famous Rocking Stone Tower, which besides housing the seventeen-ton rocking stone, contains hundreds of cabinets of valuable specimens which the McGlashan family has collected from time to time.

"I love my butterflies and the work," declared Ximena. "I find the occupation not only delightful but profitable. In the past two weeks, for instance, I have shipped over 10,000 specimens to various parts of the world. For these I have been paid $300, which is practically all profit. Payments are made promptly upon the delivery of each shipment.

"I have on hand at the present time thousands of eggs and larvae, chrysalises and cocoons, which will all make lots of money for me. Selecting the caterpillars is a simple task. I place them in fruit jars feed them with their favorite food plant, and watch their transformation into chrysalis and butterfly. It is nice to know that nature is making money for me in this way all the time.

"I am now engaged in breeding some of the rarer specimens. Some of them are worth hundreds of dollars apiece. Down in New Guinea there are specimens which measure eleven and a half inches from tip to tip, and are worth thousands of dollars apiece. I am going to obtain some of these alive if I can and try to propagate them. If I am successful, I shall realize a handsome profit, for these specimens are in great demand by big collectors."

"Ximena" is the Spanish word for queen, and Ximena has long been known among those who are familiar with her work as the Butterfly Queen. Her farm presents an animated picture.

Here, for instance, is a gross or two of small paper boxes, each containing a female moth laying eggs. There, again, is a barrel containing a hundred beautiful butterflies hatched out, perhaps, that very morning. All around are boxes, barrels and baths of larvae feeding upon their food plants, nets and cyanide bottles used in catching flies in the fields and forests in the day time, and carbide lamps and pails of sugaring mixture for capturing moths on the trees at night. Thousands of cigar boxes filled with specimens ready to be packed for shipment give some idea of the extensive business this Butterflies Are Caught by Day, Moths by Night.

Butterfly Queen has built up for herself within the short space of a year.

Many of her choicest and most valuable specimens are caught right at her home doorstep around the wood pile, or among the bushes and weeds within a few hundred feet of her home. The study of moths is comparatively new, and for this reason the demand for moth specimens is greater than that for butterflies. Moths must be caught at night and Ximena is often kept busy until a late hour in their pursuit.

She uses a mixture consisting of two quarts of stale beer, half a pint of rum and a sufficient quantity of brown sugar to make a thick mixture. With an ordinary paint brush, she then paints a tree with this composition. This is called "sugaring" a tree. In a few minutes after the process has been completed thousands of moths assemble on the tree, scenting the mixture from a distance of half a

In the daytime, hops, willows, wild cherry trees and nettles and numerous other kinds of trees and plants furnish any number of larvae which Ximena secures and propagates. She feeds her moths and butterflies with pieces of dried apple soaked in water sweetened with honey.

The butterflies of California have been pretty well worked up and classified, but not so with the moths," she declared. "This is because of the difficulty which has hitherto been experienced in catching them. There are over ten thousand persons in Europe and America who purchase butterflies and moths at a fair market value. Many individual specimens may be sold at from one to five dollars apiece, while the rarer ones have fetched prices ranging up to $500. But even the commonest kinds are salable, and there is a profit in a market for every butterfly that may be caught.

How the "Holy War" Affects Women of the Turkish Harems

By Eveline Mitford.

THE modern Turkish woman is no novice at war and revolution. During the troublous times of 1908, which resulted in the dethronement of Abdul Hamid and the rise to power of the Young Turk Party, it was generally acknowledged that no small share of the work was done by the women of all classes, who had special means of carrying documents and communicating messages, for their sex protected them from molestation.

The women of the upper classes take a keen interest in all political matters, and their subtle, indirect influence is felt in every direction—all the more dangerous for being so secret. Many a plot whose results have had far-reaching effects on Turkish history has been hatched in the privacy of the harem. They are enthusiastic patriots, and during the Revolution some threw off their veils and appeared in the streets, where they addressed crowds with much eloquence. In a recent article on the present position of Turkish women, Dr. Mary Mills Patrick quotes a Constantinople paper on the work of women in general, and of Halide Hanoum in particular, during the Revolution:

"The part played by women in the creation of the new Turkish Government should not be underestimated. If not direct, at least in indirect ways the educated Turkish woman, with her passionate nature and her devotion to the cause of liberty, rendered a very great service to the country. By her inspiring words she roused men to put an end to absolutism."

The advance made in the education of women is among the most significant signs of the rapid development of Turkey on modern lines. Fifty years ago few could read or write, for in a land where men's education was so backward, it was obvious that nothing would be done for the women. But schools—primary, secondary, and high—are now being opened in all directions, both by the Government and through private enterprises. Excellent secondary schools are to be found in various parts of the country, where young women are trained as teachers thus providing them with a career, and giving them a wide and intelligent outlook on life.

The American College for Girls under the presidency of Dr. Mary Mills Patrick, has been singled out by the Government for the training of Government students. There are at present about two hundred pupils in the college, thirty-three of whom are Turkish, for many of the difficulties which formerly barred the way to Turkish girls receiving a good education have now been removed. Two women who have been trained there have specially distinguished themselves. Halide Hanoum has thrown herself into the struggle for the greater freedom of her sex, and by her writings has done much to bring the subject before the people. She also took a part in the Revolution. Gulibau Hanoum also helped in the work of the Young Turk Party. She addressed the soldiers at Salonica before their started for the capital, bidding them remember they were patriots and soldiers.

The college is doing a fine work in preparing women for the changes that must inevitably result from increased contact with Western peoples, and in placing useful careers in their way. The Government appear to be doing their best to help as far as they are able, and they have this year set aside a sum of money with which to send abroad four non-Moslem students—a Bulgarian, a Greek, a Jewess and an Armenian—for a thoroughly modern training. These girls were chosen by competitive examination. This action called forth a strong protest from a Turkish woman in an important native paper, who maintained that Moslem women ought to have been chosen, for their religion does not forbid their education.

The idea of a professional and commercial life is not new to Turkish women. They have made their mark in literature, and have also taken up medicine and teaching. Many women engage in trade and carry on extensive businesses, which take them long journeys to distant parts of the Empire, or even further. They come in contact with many minds, and are reckoned shrewd and capable in their transactions. The women of the working classes toil as hard as the men and this fact is seldom realized. While their menfolk are away on military service they work like beasts of burden in the fields, and nothing is considered too hard for their strength.

In European and Asiatic Turkey they rear the silkworms, and have much to do with the spinning of the silk which is a profitable industry. In Macedonia and Thrace they cultivate the tobacco, as well as dry, sort, and manipulate the leaves in the factories, preparing them for exportation.

They are frugal and thrifty, but their lives are dull and monotonous, and the desire for freedom which is stirring their more fortunately placed sisters has not yet reached them. The women pedlars are among the most interesting but least-known features of Turkish life. They visit the harems, and are gladly welcomed by the ladies and [illegible] of households, to whom they bring news of the outer world. Originally the [illegible] children in the harems of [illegible] but [illegible] European countries, workers from foreign firms have taken up the work, as well as Roman Catholic nuns, who sell the articles made in the convents. There is a great demand for European products, so this branch of the native women's work is slowly passing out of their hands.

It is rarely realized that the Turkish woman's legal position is better than that of her sisters in any country in Europe. She has entire control over her property, and can will it away, sell, and buy without having to consult any one. Mahommedan women with property [illegible] have always placed their own cases in courts of law, and their have often done so with [illegible] success. If a married woman earns money it is her own, and her husband cannot touch it. She is not under the legal guardianship of her husband, and he is not responsible for her debts.

At marriage she is endowed with a separate estate, over which she has entire control, and which remains hers under any circumstances. As in Turkey sons and daughters inherit equally, her private property is often considerable. She can sue her husband and be sued by him. A sum is set aside for housekeeping expenses, and no one has a right to inquire how it is spent. Her husband is obliged to maintain her and her servants according to his means.

In fact, the legal position of the Turkish woman is such a strong one that, though a Turk is by law allowed to have four wives, he is very seldom found with more than one, as he is afraid of putting himself at the mercy of so many women.

What Ought to Be Done to Improve the Human Race

Cosmo Hamilton's Very Human, if Not Altogether Scientific, Plan to Advance the Cause of Eugenics Without Abolishing Love and Romance

A Character Study of Cosmo Hamilton.

COSMO HAMILTON, English novelist, playwright, essayist and editor of the London World, shares with H. G. Wells credit for the popular awakening of the British public to social and economic needs which, until recently, have been discussed only in an academic way. On the question of improvement of the race, Mr. Hamilton's position among eugenists is unique. His views—probably more widely published than those of any other leader of that rapidly developing crusade—are not, strictly speaking, scientific. He describes them as "human."

Mr. Hamilton is now on a visit to this country for the purpose of explaining his views about eugenics in addresses before schools and colleges and medical societies, and incidentally to witness the American production of his play, "The Blindness of Virtue," dramatized from his novel with the same title at the suggestion of the Bishop of London—the theme of novel and play illustrating Mr. Hamilton's viewpoint in the general eugenics discussion.

In the interview printed on this page, Cosmo Hamilton gives the gist of what he believes to be the only practical way of accomplishing the aims of eugenics

By COSMO HAMILTON
(In an Interview.)

THIS is an age in which people are saying what they think. They are permitted to say what they think regarding subjects which, not long ago, were taboo in general society. The newspapers in England and in this country are opening their columns to the discussion of these same subjects—the details involved in the eugenics movement, the fundamental principles affecting the future of the human race, which, until recently, were excluded from open discussion on the ground of indelicacy. Artificial standards of delicacy concerning facts of human existence and progress vital to civilization have had to yield to common sense. They have been swept away by overpowering public opinion that where blindness and ignorance are fatal to human happiness and advancement the bugbear of indelicacy ceases to be an argument for silence.

Only as recently as last June and July, when the London Daily Mail published a series of five articles dealing with the all-important facts of life, under the general title of "Father and Son," the editor of that newspaper, Lord Northcliffe, received more than a quarter of a million letters from readers of these articles, ninety per cent. of which showed entire agreement with the author.

To your disappointment, perhaps, I must confess that I am not a scientist. If eugenics is to be considered strictly as a science, and if eugenists insist on applying only coldly scientific methods in their efforts to improve the human race, then no eugenist will accept me as a comrade in his despotic enterprise. But if I am not a scientist, neither am I a fanatic pursuing a glittering ideal unfortified by observation or experience. Observation, research, experience compel me to take a human view of the whole proposition. We are dealing with human beings, not cattle. What men are able to accomplish in the direction of perfecting animal species by scientific mating and breeding they will not be able to do for themselves and other men by the same, or similar, purely despotic, scientific methods.

I regard the teaching of sex hygiene to our boys and girls as more important for the future of the race and the strength and health of nations than the teaching of reading, writing and arithmetic. You can continue to turn out a new generation of book-stuffed, mechanical, unimaginative, rule-of-three creatures, but if you do not instil into their young and receptive minds the great ideal of the Creator, if you do not make it plain to them that they possess the great gift of creating life, if you do not teach them and get them to appreciate the vital and all-important fact that the right use of this gift is the only basis of individual health, happiness and true citizenship, of racial permanence and prosperity, you, as parents, are failing lamentably, even criminally, in your duty to your children and country, and, as teachers, are wasting your time

I believe in human nature. I believe that if we appeal to all that is best and idyllic in the youthful mind, if we stir the imagination that is so lively in the mental make-up of every young thing, give them faith in God and themselves and prove to them that tomorrow and the day after is theirs to make or break, there is no need for the barnyard methods of the advanced eugenism. We must mold the material that is before us. We cannot suddenly pounce on human beings and dehumanize them. We cannot play King Canute with Nature and say to it, as he said to the incoming tide, "Back, turn back." True eugenism is surely to elevate, educate, inspire, not, I think, to mechanize, eradicate and remold

Love and sentiment are the most beautiful things in life. Do not, with them and you lay a great dull blanket over the world. Take the sun away from the sky and see what happens to the seeds. Let us rather make an enthusiastic crusade among parents, and, if parents persist in their present indifferent attitude toward sex hygiene, turn then to the teachers, the preachers, the doctors and all the earnest social workers. Do not let us act as house-breakers and raze to the ground the existing human edifice in the endeavor to build up in its place a new nature, which is to be worked by purely scientific processes

We cannot move a step without science. That we know. Science, however essential, must not, however, turn the future generation into machines. We have seen what has happened to educational systems by the application of mechanical means. We have seen the effects upon young men and women of nervous strain, of superficiality, the tyranny of examination, the penitentiary methods, the irrelevant isolation, the stamping out of individuality, the systematizing of everything, the scornful weeding out of enthusiasm and ambition, and, above all, the false doctrines of advanced thought, that have taken the place of the simple and beautiful faith in a Divine Power that made it possible for our grandfathers—uncultured, old-fashioned creatures!—to lay the foundation stones of new countries and leave their footprints in the sands of time.

Do not let us, therefore, in our great and urgent desire to secure a better and fitter and cleaner race, run amuck among theories. Let us stick close to common sense, a thing so common that we are apt to believe that it is beneath our notice. Let us stand by the man who has been made in the image of God and bring him back to Christlike ways of life. Let us, by every fair means that are in our power, endeavor to awaken fathers and mothers and teachers to the crying necessity of discarding false modesty, and fight courageously against the conventional insistence upon ignorance and shamefaced puritanism. Let us set our minds to prove that there is nothing degrading in the truth, that what is degrading and wicked and insane is the way that is pursued of never telling the truth to our children as to primary necessities of human beings, of hiding behind false modesty, of ignoring all questions of sex and of quibbling them away from the utterly mistaken standpoint of false modesty.

Let us stop the mothers and teachers of today from turning away sniggering or shamefaced from youthful questions that are prompted by the unconscious and natural awakening of the maternal instinct. Let us, in a word, awaken parents before —and this is the next step—we refashion children. Let us be human to human beings before we become scientific to machines

Civilization's enormous debt to science is universally recognized. In this matter scientific measures are indispensable—but not, in my estimation, at the beginning, except as applied to the initial necessity of sound teaching. It is scientific to replace ignorance with knowledge.

Now observe how such knowledge gained as such a way must serve as a solid foundation for characters which will seek to accomplish, as a divine privilege, all the results for the race that are desired by the most "scientific" eugenist. True love, sentiment, chivalry and romance will be ennobled and solve the problems of mating and of parentage instead of standing in the way of what the eugenists seek to accomplish

Therefore, the first and chief need is an enlightened system of teaching. Our manner of selecting teachers in the public schools, for example, applies the wrong viewpoint. Instead of admitting to the ranks of teachers every young woman or young man who seeks to make of her or his scholastic attainments a means of livelihood, we should select those who are endowed in a way to make the right and effective appeal to young minds. Teaching should not be a profession; it should be a vocation.

Observe, now, how even the most radical of the negative scientific measures proposed—and, I am informed, already actually applied in some parts of the United States—may be utilized in connection with the human way of promoting the welfare of the race. Instead of beginning with the ruthless condemnation and elimination from the privilege of parentage those who, owing to weak minds or criminal tendencies, are deemed unfit, let us hold up that prospect before the eyes of any of the young generation who do not yield readily to the right preliminary teaching. Let us say to these—when they are encount [illegible]

"You h[illegible] been taught to understand the mysteries and beauties of creation, and to know that you share with your Maker the ability and right to create and perpetuate the life of your kind on this planet. If your conduct henceforth demonstrates that you are inclined to underestimate the value of this divine gift, and to evade the responsibilities associated with it, then you must be prepared to suffer the penalty—the withdrawal of that gift through the necessary efforts of society to protect itself by weeding out the unfit."

The history of the race—particularly the history of what is called genius—shows that there is considerable uncertainty about applying the laws of heredity in a way to insure any advance of intellect or ethical qualities in the next generation. The chief stumbling block that confronts the eugenists is the physical impossibility of accounting for genius—which seems to defy every biological fact and condition. There is a growing tendency among biologists to consider genius as the result of an abnormal development of one power or quality at the expense of others

For example, several of the world's greatest geniuses were victims of mortal maladies of mind or body. It is almost common knowledge that Julius Cæsar, Alexander and Napoleon were sufferers from epilepsy. Pascal was a hopeless victim of neurasthenia. Spinoza, Keats and Mozart were doomed by tuberculosis. And so on. As men with normal bodies and normal health, would they have been geniuses? Did they inherit those disabilities? If so, could we predicate a generation of geniuses upon a parentage with tendencies toward tuberculosis, epilepsy and neuras[illegible]

Owing to a [illegible] our brains, Galton, the [illegible] of [illegible] has been criticised for [illegible] famous book "The In[illegible]ce of Genius." It is suggested that if he had called it a work "The Inheritance of Ability," his students and disciples would have been saved a deal of difficulty. For there are plenty of instances of inherited ability, and that is an advantage surely to be gained by going about the work of improving the race in a human way

There is at least one very good reason why examples of inherited genius, even of inherited ability, are so rare. Genius and marked ability so absorb the minds and activities of their possessors that there is usually no time or inclination left for the family. The father is too busy, too successful in a material way, to personally attend to the education and other training of his children. In the case of boys, after a certain age the mother's influence—even if she has the will and the ability—is seldom equal to the occasion. Often she is absorbed in social activities as much as those of her husband in business or politics. In [illegible] children are left largely to the [illegible] and careless management of [illegible]s

We know that the development of criminal tendencies is mainly a matter of environment. Both parents may have been irreproachable in their personal morals, but too much absorbed in their [illegible] worldly careers to see that the [illegible] of their offspring were [illegible] set in the right path. It is perfectly apparent that the most reckless and unstable characters among the youth of this generation are the sons of men wholly absorbed in the accumulation of wealth. These boys and young men, having no responsibilities of any kind, no regular occupation, no need of thought about their own future with money [illegible] abundantly supplied, and being untaught in any worthy sense, naturally abandon themselves to all sorts of pleasures, with a growing tendency always toward distractions that are unworthy and destructive

Rich fat heads, money-worshippers, without thought and no ideals outside of the sordid realm of money—these are the fathers, increasing thousands of them, who stand as the greatest obstacle in the way of the improvement of the race. They are the most potent influence for the race's deterioration. It is impossible to reach their minds or souls with the truth. Even in Canada, that big, young country which, we have flattered ourselves, would redeem us by producing a race superior in character and ideals—I observed to be infected with the same disease that money-mania which excludes all thought or care for the future of the [illegible]

While [illegible] are struggling with the difficulties in the way of improving human [illegible] along the same scientific methods as to improve cattle, and are trying to find an economic system that will sufficiently compensate young men and women for the sacrifice of their personal liberty that is involved in any [illegible] of [illegible] selective mating, there is one thing we can begin to do at once—to build the necessary solid foundation of knowledge in the place of ignorance

Looking to America to Uplift India---By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1912, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

WE imagine, here in the West, that people in the Orient live close to Nature, and that our way of herding in cities is not one of their ways.

But it seems that all over the world today there is an evil which has to be combated by the few sensible souls.

With us there is a tendency to swing back to old conditions, for the abandoned farms of the New England States are beginning to be bought by city folk, tired of the turmoil and whirl of the crowded centres, and many of these old homesteads are being transformed into beautiful Summer residences.

Over in India there used to be many lovely villages where well-to-do people lived in comfort, and where they took pride in making ideal surroundings for their own families and for the general public to enjoy.

The wealth of India's Maharajas and Princes is enormous, and when these men had their country seats as permanent homes their money was spent lavishly in perfecting and beautifying their environs. The craze for city life has affected these men during the last score of years, and the villages of India are suffering in consequence. Every man of wealth and position in India has a palace on the Ganges, in or near Benares, the Sacred City, and the Capital City of India, Calcutta, (just changed to Delhi by King George), has drawn the Maharajas away from their village homes more and more. Here is the idea of one Maharaja, Chandy Nandy, who wants the old order of things restored:

"It is the fashion nowadays among the rich and educated, in whom lies the sole hope of the nation, to have their homes in villages and to live in towns and cities where ease and luxury rule to their heart's content. As a result of this their villages are being turned into jungles and are becoming hot-beds of various diseases. Want of re-excavation has helped the luxuriant growth of wild weeds in large and beautiful tanks that were once full of pure and healthy drinking water. These weeds get dried in Summer and with the advent of rains they are decomposed and poison the water of the tanks. The innocent and poor villagers drink it and the poison relieves them of the burden of life.

"We Indians are conservatives to the backbone. With great difficulty and perseverance people can be persuaded to deviate from the ever-beaten track. It is a good old maxim that 'example is better than precept.' Educated and rich brethren, take up the lead. Spread education among your countrymen and try your utmost to improve agriculture and the arts of the country. Leave your city palaces and come back to your village houses, try to improve your sanitation and help your poor neighbors to push forward and prosper. The time is now come when our rich zamindars, instead of rolling in luxury, should take a little trouble for the good of their tenants.

"The condition of the agriculturists, laborers and artisans in our country is pitiable beyond description. Their poor earning cannot feed them properly, not to speak of maintaining their families. Many of them pass away from this world, falling victims to various diseases for want of proper food and dwelling houses. The greater portion of their earnings are spent in paying the rent of their landlords and in liquidating their debts to the rapacious money-lenders. The very little that remains is spent in a month or two in maintaining their wives and children. For the rest of the year they keep themselves by borrowing grains and money at high rates of interest from the money-lenders and their debt goes on increasing, which they can never pay off. Educating their children becomes out of the question

"Over and above this there are the social evils to perform. Excessive expenses in the marriage of their children and in performing the 'Sradha' of their departed parents make them penniless. Next comes luxury to complete their ruin. (So long as people are not taught the principles of economy and while they do not act according to them there is no hope of improving their condition. Without economy and self-help, no nation can prosper.)

"Many are of opinion that caste system is one of the most important causes of our present deterioration. It is long standing and we cannot expect to get rid of it soon. But it is in the present time only that it has stood in the way of our social improvement. In olden days people, though of different sects, lived in amity and peace, as if they were members of one family. It is a matter of great regret that that brotherly feeling of old has taken its leave of present day society and factious spirit has come in its place. How can we think of prospering if there be no unity among us?"

The keynote of the Government of the United States of America is 'United we stand, divided we fall.' We must try hard, hand in hand, shoulder to shoulder, for that unity and brotherly feeling, and to establish town and village societies for that purpose."

To hear our country quoted as a model is embarrassing when we know how desperate is the condition of things in our industrial centres

To make a great hue and cry about the wretched child wives and widows in India seems daring when we turn to the statistics of the Vice Commission of Chicago and learn that in that city alone there are five thousand unfortunate women

Until we right some of these awful conditions and until we can educate our men to right thinking, which alone will lessen the demand for white slaves, we need to be very silent about our republic and our model methods of education.

No education is of any value which does not elevate the standards of the race, and bring into play those old and immortal principles of self-control, honor and self-respect

Are these qualities prominent in our modern America?

THE CURE.

YOU may talk of reformations, of the Economic Plan
That shall stem the Social Evil in its course,
But the Ancient Sin of nations must be got at in THE MAN.
If you want to cleanse a river, seek the source.

Ever since his first beginning Man has had his way in lust,
He has never learned the law of Self Control;
And the World condones his sinnings and the doctors say he must,
And the churches shut their eyes and take his toll.

And the lauded "Lovely Mothers" send the son out into life
With no knowledge-welded armor for the fight;
"He will make his way like others, through the Oat field, to the Wife";
"He will somehow be led onward, to the light."

Yes, his leaders, they shall find him. On the highways at each turn (Since you did not choose to counsel or to warn)
They shall tempt him, then shall bind him; they shall blight, and they shall burn,
Down to offspring and descendants yet unborn.

It can never end through preaching; it can never end through laws;
This social sore no punishment can heal,
It must be the mother's teaching of the purpose, and the cause,
And God's glory, lying under sex appeal.

She must feel no fear to name it to the children it has brought;
She must speak of it as sacred and sublime;
She must beautify, not shame it, by her speech and by her thought,
Till they listen, and respect it, for all time.

From the heart they rested under ere they saw the light of day
Must the daughters and the sons be taught this truth,
Till they think of it with wonder, as a holy thing alway,
While love's wisdom guides them safely through their youth.

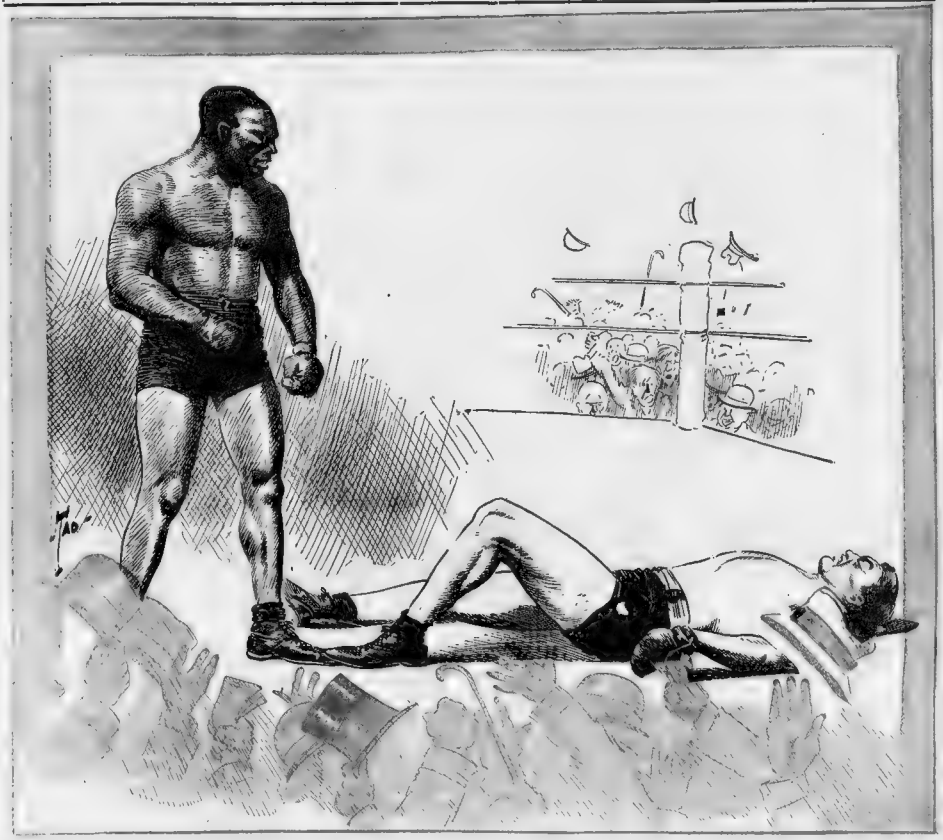
Oh, the world has made its devil, and the Mothers let it grow;
And the Man has dragged their thoughts down to the earth.
There will be no Social Evil, when each waking mind shall know
All the grandeur and the beauty hid in birth.

When each Mother sets the fashion to win confidence and trust,
And to teach the mighty lesson, Self-Control,
We can lift the great Sex passion from the darkness and the dust.
And enshrine it on the altar of the soul.

1912 YEARS OF CHRISTIANITY—AND THIS

The brutality that was planted in man during the millions of years that his animal ancestors lived on this planet ahead of him cannot be wiped out in a day.

Such a creature as Johnson, the Negro Fighter, is typical of the whole prize fighting disgrace. And that disgrace represents one future of our "Civilization." How long will law makers, public officials and clergymen permit the scandal and shame of prize fighting to exist?



FOR a long time the attention of this country has been concentrated upon Johnson, the negro prizefighter, "Champion of the World."

At almost any moment during years past, if in a crowd you had pointed to the North and said, "There is the president of the greatest university in the United States," and had then pointed to the South and said, "There is Johnson, the negro champion," ninety out of a hundred in the crowd would have looked TOWARD THE SOUTH, AND TOWARD THE NEGRO FIGHTER.

Johnson was followed, admired and praised as the conqueror of Jeffries, the greatest white fighter and the conqueror of every other man that came before him. His powerful automobiles, his expensive clothing, the hundreds of thousands of dollars paid to him by brutal crowds---all were exploited for years.

Then came another phase of Johnson's career.

During the last few weeks the public has heard how one white woman whom Johnson had married shot herself, in shame and despair, in the apartment which she occupied with the prizefighter.

The public has read also since that suicide of the legal proceedings in the federal courts, of a mother going to law to get back her daughter, a young white girl living under Johnson's control in the rooms above his saloon.

* * * * *

The sickening revelations of Johnson's private life have turned against him that stupid tide of public admiration that followed him as a prizefighter.

The dull-minded lovers of brutality that cheered him and followed him because he lived by knocking men senseless now denounce him because of the revelations concerning his private conduct and personal immorality.

* * * * *

There is no more reason for denouncing Johnson today than at anytime. There is just as much reason and no more for denouncing Johnson as for denouncing anybody else connected with the brutal, degraded, immoral and unlawful prizefighting "Profession."

Johnson's life and conduct are typical of prizefighters as a whole, typical of the physical brutes that do the fighting, typical of the mental brutes that "manage" the fighters, typical of the degraded crowds eager for bloodshed and the sight of pain that sit "at the ringside."

* * * * *

The revelations connected with the life of Johnson ought not merely to result in driving one individual negro out of the prizefight ring and from the country.

There should be in the nation enough self respect and indignation to end once and for all the prizefighting brutality from top to bottom.

The hypocritical laws that permit boxing, so-called, in order that politicians, "commissioners" and others may get rich by violating the fundamental law of the land should be wiped from the statute books.

Every Governor of a State knows that prizefighting, however named or disguised, is brutal, illegal and degrading.

The prizefighter lives as a criminal, a life of desperation, vice and violence.

And those that live upon him, and those that support him share his viciousness and his crime.

An ignorant, brutal negro such as this Johnson is not so much to be blamed as the white men that have given their thousands to watch him at his brutal game. He is less worthy of blame than the negligent and criminal public officials that have allowed him to degrade the public mind.

* * * * *

For two thousand years the teachings of Christianity have been known to this world. Still we have as the greatest public amusement, exhibitions of brutal violence, and we have as national heroes such brutes as this Johnson and the men he encounters.

And we have in many States thousands of prizefighting exhibitions yearly at scores of so-called "clubs," where thieves, murderers, burglars and criminals of all kinds gather, and where young men and boys are filled with the idea that brutal power and cruel punishment are admirable.

* * * * *

Wherever a prizefight occurs in a State, the Governor of the State is disgraced. For he has the power to stop it if he will. The prizefighter and his manager both know well that they are criminals and outside the law, and will not dare to oppose action that any honest official may take against him.

Johnson, with one white wife a suicide and a white girl held as a prisoner, half of the country inflamed against him, is no better and no worse than the rest of the prizefighting gang permitted to disgrace the country.

He is on a par with all of those connected with the profit-making side of prizefighting, and in some ways he is the superior of those that gather to glut their love of brutality by watching him fight.

At least he is IN the fight and in one way he is better than those at the ringside, just as the gladiator, dying in the arena two thousand years ago, was better than the effeminate, perfumed, cowardly dandy that watched him die.

Not Johnson alone, but prizefighting and the whole prizefighting crew should be driven out as a result of Johnson's emphatic revelation of the real character of the class to which he belongs—drunken, diseased, vicious, dishonest and immoral. The degraded remnant of the class that fought for the public amusement in the old days should be wiped out and forgotten.

HISTORIC GRANARY BURYING GROUND

By SAMUEL ABBOTT GREEN.

Ex-Mayor of Boston and Librarian of the Massachusetts Historical Society.

THE Granary Burial Ground, next to Park Street Church on Tremont street, is another of those historic places which are so numerous in Boston and which are to all Bostonians so interesting and so inspiring.

It was opened in 1660 on what was then a part of Boston Common. Strange to say, it was not given any real attention until 1836, when it was planted with trees. Four years later, in 1840, it was enclosed by a stone wall and iron fence. More than forty years later, in 1882, bronze memorial tablets were placed upon the gates, telling the stranger or the visitor the history of the place.

Close by, on the site where is now the large and massive store and office structure known as the Tremont building, stood the Tremont House, one of Boston's most famous hotels.

Here, from 1828 to 1894, the Tremont House sheltered among its guests the most notable visitors to the city. The late King Edward VII., as Prince of Wales, was a guest here; under its roof Charles Dickens conceived those American Notes which brought down upon his gifted head such angry and bitter criticism; Jenny Lind, the glorious singer of those days; Thackeray, England's other great novelist, and several of the earlier Presidents of the United States, wrote their names on the Tremont House register.

The name "Granary" came to the burying ground, as I have already pointed out, through the fact that in the eighteenth century the town used its site as a granary. Some 12,000 bushels of grain were stored here in reserve, to be sold at cost to the people in case some great calamity or a famine should make the food supply run short.

No other cemetery in this section contains the ashes of more illustrious dead.

Three signers of the Declaration of Independence are buried there: Robert Treat Paine, John Hancock and Samuel Adams. It is the last resting place of Peter Faneuil, of Uriah Cotting, of Chief Justice Sewall, of Paul Revere, of Jeremy Belknap, and also of many of the early Governors of Massachusetts. The pyramid in the centre is the monument over the family of Benjamin Franklin.

The men who died in the Boston Massacre were buried here, though their civic monument stands on Boston Common. The grave of John Hancock is marked by a marble monument, erected in 1895 by the State of Massachusetts.

Taken both together, first a visit to the interior of Park Street Church with its interesting monuments and then a walk through the quiet pathways of the burial ground make a treat which no boy or girl growing up in Boston can afford to ignore.

Indeed, this whole neighborhood, around the Granary Burying Ground, is a rich mine of grand Bostonian history. Close by, as one ascends Beacon street, is the Athenaeum, as fine a library of its kind as we have in the country. Across Tremont street, at the head of Hamilton place, stood for many years the Music Hall, which served as a church for such preachers as Theodore Parker and Murray and Alger, and where the Symphony Orchestra, one of Boston's proudest possessions, gave many of its most memorable concerts.

NEW ENGLAND WOMEN EARN MONEY AT HOME

THE woman who lives in the city has a great many chances for home work that are denied to her sister in the small community—the village or the country town. She is nearer the source of supplies—the big bargain sales, the factories which give out work—on the one hand, and nearer the market—the people who are busing in front-insuring quantities on the other

But that is no reason why the farmer's wife or the woman in the small town generally should despair of being able to do money-making work at home. She has some special opportunities that the city woman cannot avail herself of.

Three letters today tell of money earned by taking advantage of natural products close at hand. To be sure, Winter is coming on, but those ideas will always be good, and it is not too late to do a little with them now.

"When I lived upon an isolated farm," says Esther L. Oliver of Templeton, Mass. "I gathered medicinal herbs, raspberry leaves and the leaves and blossoms of wild yarrow and hardhack, which I spread to dry upon papers laid upon the attic floor. When dry I sold them from six to nine cents a pound."

Raising Catnip.

"Why don't you raise catnip?" asks Mrs. William Blackwell of Boylston, Mass. "It is easy to raise, doesn't need any care, and the city women who have pet cats are willing to pay a good price for fresh catnip. Hops are also easy to raise and many people enjoy a hop pillow."

And Mrs. G. A. Rennie of Londonville, Vt., says: "Anyone living in the country near a city can make money by gathering sweet-flag roots. Just clean, slice and candy them; then sell either in bulk or in cartons. I have sold over one hundred dollars' worth in a short time."

The profit there is in chicken-raising is set forth by Mrs. L. J. Sargent, North Berwick, Me.

"I keep hens to sell to the beach market," she says. "My hens I keep until late in the Fall. When they stop laying I sell all but about forty—all my coop will keep comfortably through the Winter.

"A mother of a large family can tend hens and teach her children to take pride in them. Three young ladies here have been sent to college by the profit of hens. The Plymouth Rock is best for broilers, the Leghorn for layers.

Compelled to Earn.

Here is a letter from Mrs. H. L. Milliken of West View Farm, Bridgewater, Mass.:

"My home being at the seashore in Maine, I found few opportunities to earn money at home until necessity compelled. My husband was taken to the hospital and I was left quite without resources. However, I possessed some 1,500 books, good substantial reading and also popular fiction. Everyone, especially the summer people, was always borrowing my books, so I conceived the idea of renting books at two cents per day, five cents per week for novels and magazines. I had hours on Tuesday and Friday to let out books. The scheme took in money for I bought no new books and had all magazines given to me.

"There are other small ventures by which the country woman may earn money at home, some of which are told of in the items following. One more to add, however, is worth noting before we turn to them, and that is that if you live in the country, but near a highroad where automobile parties pass, you will find a ready sale for ice cream and cold drinks in the Summer, hot drinks in the Winter, and sandwiches and cakes all the year round, if they are well cooked and attractively served.

Raising Violets.

VIOLETS worth $221.50 were raised and sold by a young girl during her spare time from school and during her vacation. The violet patch was 200.5 feet the first season and she sold them to a florist at 50 cents per hundred. The second season, as she transplanted more than twice as many plants in the same space, the patch was 1,000 feet more ground, $450 was realized from her sales.

WORLD'S BEST TALENT TO GIVE BOSTON BETTER OPERA THIS WINTER

JESKA SWARTZ. EVELYN SCOTNEY. EDITH BARNES.

BERNICE FISHER ELIZABETH AMSDEN ELVIRA LEVERONI FLORENCE HINKLE

Seven stars of grand opera stage who are to thrill Boston audiences.

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

"WHAT kind of an opera are we going to have this season?"

This is a question which is frequently asked in Boston, and they make various replies. I always say "Excellent" and I say so because I actually believe that we are to have better opera here this season than ever before.

During the past three seasons we were compelled to shut our ears to some things about our opera. It was impossible to create a perfect grand opera ensemble where none was left.

Other pictures will complete the regular house program.

Tremont Theatre.

Henry Miller and "The Rainbow" will begin their second week at the Tremont Theatre tomorrow night. The large supporting company gives Mr. Miller flawless support.

To aid in this movement a concert is being arranged which will be of unusual attractiveness. Sousa and his band have been secured for a single evening in Boston, and they will be heard at their best in Mechanics' building on the evening of Sunday, November 17. It has been some time since Boston music lovers have had a chance to hear this noted organization, and Sousa will have a number of novelties prepared especially for the Shriners.

Scenic Temple.

Several attractive vaudeville features that are new to Boston and a long list of motion pictures will make up the new program at the Scenic Temple tomorrow.

The Corset Petticoat's Coming

The Merry Widow Is Wearing It

MISS CYNTHIA PEROT.

The Manager Ordered Petticoats and Woolen Underwear When the Girls Wore Tight Skirts, So Miss Perot Invented a Corset Petticoat.

CYNTHIA PEROT AT THE MAJESTIC

And now it is the corset petticoat; Cynthia Perot, the dashing Jersey Zo Zo of the Hasin girls in "The Merry Widow," which comes to the Majestic [illegible]

And it all came about after the ruling of Harry Cullis, Mr. Savage's general stage director, that the girls of the company should wear petticoats and thereby do away with the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] was touring Canada. The thrust was directed against the skin tight skirts, and the girls were in a panic, as all had gowned themselves for their conquests in [illegible] lines with the latest modes. Miss Perot rebelled and uttered a volatile, typically French speech. It looked as if Miss Perot's modes were in for the feminine black hand treatment.

Then the versatile Miss Perot invented Woman is the mother of invention. She designed and executed a corset petticoat which permitted the tight skirt to be as effective as ever, and caused it to cling as tantalisingly as ever. The new garment consists of a silk skirt attached to the lower edge of the corset, attached on the inside of the bodice, thus [illegible] [illegible] ment. Miss Perot says it is remarkably warm

AL REEVES TALKS ON FAIR SEX VOTERS

Al Reeves was asked his view on a woman's right to a vote, and if his campaign to secure the enfranchisement of the female portion of the profession Mr. Reeves said: "The important question is whether giving votes to women in this country is going to help the race or intimidate it. If it will help the race and make it finer and better, it ought to be done, and if it will not, it would be a step backwards. To decide this question one should understand what a vote is and why there is a vote at all.

A vote is a political right, and, like a tax which is a political burden—had its origin in the organization of society. In an unorganized or partially organized social condition the stronger set physically had all the rights and bore the only burdens, thus of fighting to win or protect a home and furnishing the food. Men have yielded part of the power inherent in strength and have reserved the vote. Woman never surrendered any such power, and consequently never reserved any right

The supremacy of Ida Fuller in the one-act role is announced as a fixed feature at the Majestic Theatre, beginning with the performance of "The Merry Widow" next Wednesday. Mary E. Savage manager of "Little Boy Blue," which follows "The Merry Widow" and "Excuse Me," which follow "The Merry Widow" at this theatre, is responsible for the proposition and has found hearty co-operation from the Wilbur-Shubert Company. The experiment was tried last Wednesday at the matinee of "Little Boy Blue," and its popularity was instantly revealed.

Mr. Savage has a record for lowering the scale of midweek matinee prices for the benefit of the young people who are unable to pay the night prices for good seats. He was the first manager to inaugurate the popular-priced Wednesday matinee.

STORIES HEARD IN THEATRE LOBBIES

Ruth Chatterton Became an Actress Because She Made a Bet.

Even the student Saracens had a saying that only a beautiful woman can afford to be independent, and times haven't changed.

So it is not surprising to learn that Kitty Gordon, with an international record for beauty and brains, as well as oath that she would never consent to a reconciliation with her husband, Captain the Honorable Henry Beresford, unless he agreed that she must not sacrifice herself to his pardicular and self-suffered happiness. "The difficulty with most men," said Miss Gordon, "is that they want your soul individual life to stop when your love for [illegible] begins. They want you to sacrifice your ambitions, your economic independence and your own individual self to their [illegible] comfort. When I made my oath and I made it very sacredly, too, I was determined to be Kitty Gordon, till I died, and not Mrs. So-and-So. They call me a heartbreaker, but that is not true. A lot of men have proposed to me, and I've ignored them. Why? Merely because it was too obvious that they wanted to be lord and master. I am willing to be a partner—even a servant of playthings, I've American men are more liberal with this than Englishmen. And I really believe cosmopolitans such as you find in Paris and America are more liberal than either. Lastways I have found them so.

Ruth Chatterton, who plays the rôle of the daughter in "The Rainbow," and who is the youngest leading woman on the American stage, became an actress because she made a bet with a girl friend that she could play a role on the professional stage after a single week of preparation. She won her bet.

"I was in Washington, in Washington two years ago, when I was sixteen years old," Miss Chatterton explains, "and I had a girl chum who was a member of a Summer stock company there. I used to assist her in her dressing room, and became awfully interested in the work. One afternoon the stage manager dropped in as I was coming out of my friend's room and said: 'You're the very girl I'm looking for to play Polly in "Merely Mary Ann" next week.' 'Oh, but I can't act,' I said. 'That's why I want you,' he replied. 'Have you got the nerve to do it?' Of course, I had, my friend interrupted, with an air of superiority. 'And if she had the nerve, do you think she could learn her part in one week?' 'That gets it. I will bet you a box of candy I will learn it,' said I will do it, if mother will let me.'

"Well, I did it and they must have been satisfied for they asked me to play the second and Claudia in 'The Price Chap' the next week."

Clifton Crawford, who will come to the Boston Theatre as the star in "My Best Girl," tells the following story about John L. Sullivan, who was actor: "Francis Wilson, having spent several Summers at a small hotel in Vermont advised John Mason, who was in search of a quiet place for a rest, to go there and tell the proprietor that he was Wilson's friend. Mason arrived at the small town and on his way to the inn. He found the proprietor sitting on the [illegible] porch while his chair tipped back, smoking a corn cob pipe.

"I am Mr. Mason," he began, 'I have come here through a friend of mine Mr. Francis Wilson.'

"The landlord, quite unconcerned kept right on smoking, and being quite hard of hearing, the newcomer started again, some what louder. 'I am Mr. Mason; I have come here through a friend of mine Mr. Francis Wilson.'

"Still no response. Mason figured it the man is deafness, Al Hamilton began once more. 'I say,' he roared, 'I am Mr Mason, and I have come here through a friend of mine Mr. Francis Wilson.'

"The proprietor slowly took his pipe from his mouth and turned to Mason himself yet the first time he said calmly: 'What the hell do you [illegible]'

E. W. Newman to Speak on "The Venice of the North."

At Symphony Hall, Friday evening and Saturday afternoon November 15 and 16, E. M. Newman will begin his new series of travel talks with "Holland the Venice of the North." Mr. Newman's treatment of the country of dykes, dirt, art, stately Dutchmen, of liquid streets, of the home of the first settlers of New Amsterdam of a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] cheese will be found very fascinating.

Mr. Newman has been over it [illegible] and to those who have visited the country, his comments will be [illegible] [illegible] tour will reveal many things of unusual interest. CATHERINE PROCTOR IN "THE CONCERT" AT THE HOLLIS.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

NO greater tribute could be turned to the credit of an operetta than the simple fact that it had been able to outlive its own contribution to feminine fashion in dress. To live beyond the usefulness of the pretty styles created in its own behalf when its days were young and blithesome is an achievement not generally reached in these days of doubtful musical comedy. And yet "The Merry Widow" will move into the Majestic tomorrow without a single "Merry Widow" hat. Such is the stability of fashion where the ladies are concerned. Probably the most freely advertised hat of the century, the "Merry Widow" product is not even tolerated in its own neighborhood. The return of "The Merry Widow"—even without its famous and former head-dress—emphasizes Henry W. Savage's devotion to musical productions that serve him well. It apparently matters but little to Mr. Savage that this piece is five or more seasons old and consequently something of an old story, for each year finds him sending it on the road in new and carefully selected clothing. The usual custom of indulging in encores in second and third seasons of a successful musical play has not been followed by Mr. Savage in the case of "The Merry Widow," and while that spirited lady may not wear the gowns and hats that once distinguished her from other musical play heroines, she may be depended upon to dress both in the prevailing fashion and in good taste. And there will be no "Merry Widow" hats.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

MR. A. H. WOODS is reforming backwards—which, explained, means that after a season of utmost refinement and art in the drama, he proposes to take one more fling at entertainments of the spicy variety. The real truth about Mr. Woods is that he is, perhaps, the best thermometer of public taste now at large in the show business. And it may also be said of him that no man's activities in the drama have covered as wide a field of operation—that is, if you count back to the lurid days of melodrama. A few seasons ago Mr. Woods set a new pace in that kind of farce and musical comedy that wore red trimmings, and he was promptly scorned by the drama's most distinguished uplifters. He was not scorned by the public, however, and "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," "The Girl in the Taxi" and "The Girl from Rector's" moved straight across the country, from Salem to Seattle, breaking attendance records at every stop. Then Mr. Woods began to give his attention to art in the drama and launched Marguerita Sylva in "Gypsy Love," and engaged in other praiseworthy undertakings. It is plain that he intends to display more variety in his movements this season, for it is announced that Carter De Haven will arrive at the Colonial on December 2 with a new Woods attraction, called "Exceeding the Speed Limit." Just what kind of a speed limit Mr. De Haven is to exceed is not made clear, but inasmuch as A. H. Woods promises one of the liveliest farces with music the town has ever seen, it is safe to suspect that he is stepping back to the type of plays that have never failed in the supreme box office test.

MARGARET FAY IN "MADAME" AT THE CASTLE SQ.

MR. JOHN J. McGRAW, who has been flirting with the drama at B. F. Keith's Theatre, left town last night convinced that as a profitable bi-print in baseball there is nothing like vaudeville. To those to have known Mr. McGraw only through newspaper reports of ball games and who have seen him only in the New York Giants' uniform, he proved a pleasant surprise. McGraw's early rise to fame in baseball was as a player whose preference for violent conflict with umpires marked him as a man to be avoided on certain days, and the years that have passed have not softened his reputation as an aggressive citizen. In vaudeville, however, we have found him simple, quiet and refined, with splendid stage presence and an ample sense of humor. In fact, Mr. McGraw, more familiarly known as "Muggsy," was a complete surprise to many people. His manner was modest, his voice soft and his appearance distinctly agreeable. Not even John Drew could exhibit more graceful qualities in these particular departments.

NOW that the combined energies and talents of Montgomery and Stone and Elsie Janis have safely steered "The Lady of the Slipper" into the most conspicuous success of the present New York musical comedy season, it is just as well to explain that before the piece was finally launched it was necessary to send a desperate call for help to an old man in Connecticut, whose palmy days in the drama were those in which he served as stage carpenter at the old Boston Museum. Modern devices and modern skill failed completely when it came to the simple matter of making star traps for the show. Broadway mechanics held up their hands and declared that the star traps demanded for "The Lady of the Slipper" could not be made—they attempted the job and failed. Now, a star trap is one that permits an actor, or an acrobat, to shoot through the stage floor at terrific speed. When things looked the darkest for the new Dillingham show, somebody suggested, jokingly, that Stage Carpenter Prescott used to make successful star traps at the Boston Museum thirty years ago and perhaps he could do it again. They found Prescott, now more than seventy years old, on a little farm in Connecticut. He was coaxed to New York to see what could be done to save the situation. He was reminded that the most skilled carpenters of the present generation had surrendered. Mr. Prescott became an active stage carpenter for three days and laughed at the inability of the modern mechanic. He easily built the star traps that made it possible for "The Lady of the Slipper" to have smoothly running performances. He's back on the farm now, convinced that the mechanical side of the drama has fallen away to a joke.

AL REEVES, who might be called the most intimate actor with his audiences in burlesque, is on his way "home" again and will arrive at the Gaiety Theatre tomorrow. Wherever Reeves and his "Beauty Show" plays is "home" to this comedian—his own town. You may doubt that Mr. Reeves was born in every city on the Eastern burlesque circuit, even with his own positive declaration of the fact fresh in your mind, but inasmuch as his entertainment does not depend upon his birthplace for its artistic success, there shouldn't be any widespread worry over his rather extensive claims to "home" towns. Mr. Reeves is one of those burlesque managers who sticks to the old idea that the public wants girls with its entertainment—lots of 'em—and possibly he is right. At any rate, he never travels without an extensive supply of fair young things, and he always manages to keep them well out to the front, near the footlights. A few seasons ago Mr. Reeves, with the assistance of George M. Cohan, ventured into the $2 drama, but he didn't like the atmosphere. He says burlesque is good enough for him.

THE return of "The Concert" to the Hollis gives local playgoers a second opportunity of enjoying one of the rarest and most agreeable comedies afloat under the Belasco banner. A more perfectly staged or intelligently acted play has not been produced in ten years. As a dramatic entertainment "The Concert" stands at the top of the list—not only of last season's new plays, but of this season's as well. It is the plain duty of every playgoer to see "The Concert."
